* The Patent Onzina, or Waved Jupon, does away with the unsightly results of the ordinary hoops; and so perfect are the wave-like bands that a lady may ascend a steep stair, lean against a table, throw herself into an arm-chair, pass to her stall at the Opera, or occupy a fourth seat in a carriage, without inconvenience to herself or others, or provoking the rude remarks of the observers; and, lastly, it allows the dress to fall into graceful folds.*

'We cannot help thinking that the truest monument to the memory of Shakespeare—the most worthy of himself, and the most valuable to the world at large—will be found in the increasing opportunity for obtaining a knowledge of his works. Here is a publication by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, at a cost which affords opportunity to the million for making acquaintance with the poet and philosopher of all time, in a form combining excellence of type and paper, and with a liberal supply of pictorial illustrations; and, in addition to these good qualities, accompanied by a series of notes, remarkable for intelligence and good taste. There can be little doubt that this edition will soon be found in the cottage of the artisan and on the table of the student. It may be as well to call attention to the fact that the notes are by Mr. and Mrs. Cowden Clarke, whose devotion to Shakespeare has so long been acknowledged as a sincerity.'—Manchester Examiner.

THE ART-JOURNAL.

Price 2s. 6d. MONTHLY.

Each Part containing Three Engravings on Steel and numerous Illustrations on Wood.

In this popular Journal, which commenced a New Volume with the Year 1864, every topic that can be, directly or indirectly, instructive or interesting concerning Art and Art-manufacture will be dealt with; while the utmost exertions will be made to preserve, by the number, richness, and variety of the Illustrations, that popular character which has been the main source of its success, and by which its purpose has been chiefly accomplished—to extend and strengthen a love and appreciation of Art among all classes of the community. The best writers on Art, and on all matters auxiliary, will be zealous co-operators; the Literary contents will be varied in character, and of value to all classes—to the Artist, the Amateur, the Student, and the General Public, as well as to the Manufacturer and the Artisan. The Engravings with which the Work will be liberally illustrated will, it is hoped, be generally allowed to comprise examples of rare merit and skill.

The Literature embraces—

UNIFORM WITH LORD MACAULAY’S ‘ENGLAND.’

A NEW AND POPULAR EDITION OF THE HISTORY OF SCOTLAND;
FROM THE ACCESSION OF ALEXANDER III. TO THE UNION.

BY PATRICK FRASER TYTLER, F.R.S.E. & F.A.S.

The former Editions of this great National Work having been produced under circumstances which limited its circulation to the wealthy few, the present Publishers is glad to state that he is now in a position to issue it at a price which will place it within the reach of all.

From the ‘Times.’

‘The want of a complete History of Scotland has long been felt; and from the specimen which the volume before us gives of the author’s talents and capacity for the task he has undertaken, it may be reasonably inferred that the deficiency will be very ably supplied. The descriptions of the battles are concise, but full of spirit. The events are themselves of the most romantic kind, and are detailed in a very picturesque and forcible style.’

From the ‘Quarterly Review.’

‘The most brilliant age of Scotland is fortunate in having found a historian whose sound judgment is accompanied by a graceful liveliness of imagination. We venture to predict that this book will soon become, and long remain, the standard History of Scotland.’

The New Edition of Mr. Tytler’s ‘History of Scotland’ will be issued in a style uniform with the People’s Edition of Lord Macaulay’s ‘History of England,’ and Sir Archibald Alison’s ‘History of Europe.’ It will be carefully printed on superior paper, and will be completed in Sixteen Monthly Parts, crown 8vo,—forming Four handsome Volumes.

VOLUME I., price 4s. 6d., and PART I., price 1s., will be published on MAY 2, 1864.

CHAMBERS’S JOURNAL OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

A New Series of this well-known Periodical, with some slight changes in its arrangements and appearance, was commenced with the present year, the main object of the alterations being to give new readers an opportunity of subscribing without burdening them with back numbers.

The Parts and Numbers of this Series already published contain the exciting Romance of real life

LOST SIR MASSINGBERD.

In which, ‘among other things,’ to use the words of a London Critic, ‘the sagacity of Townsend, the Old Bow Street Officer, in the days of one pound notes, is excellently hit off,’ with upwards of Seventy Papers besides on subjects of great popular interest, for Two Shillings.

The First Number in May will include the early chapters of another Romance of real life, which will extend over three or four months.

LORD LYNN’S WIFE,

As an instance of the attention paid by the Conductors to passing topics, St. George’s Day, the Anniversary of the Death, and also, as is generally supposed, of the Birth of Shakespeare, is chosen for the publication of a double supplement, devoted to the Poet, in which all that can be gathered respecting his Birthplace, Life, and Works is given, in this instance, illustrated by a Portrait and Sixteen costly Engravings on Wood, price Threepence.

‘If other Magazines of late years have exceeded this in glitter and show,’ says the Globe, ‘we do not think any one of them has equalled Chambers’ in its soundness and general utility, or in the quiet good taste of its articles.’

‘Chambers,’ says the Spectator, ‘is still unrivalled. Very useful and amusing also are those papers which give the reader all the precedents for any of the social events of the day.’

Nor has the quaint humour of his early days departed, says another critic, ‘as those may testify who can enjoy the ludicrous description of the Skaters in Kensington Gardens, which has no spiteful hatred underlying it.’

‘The good healthy tone which pervades every paper,’ says Bell’s Messenger, ‘must always render this Journal an agreeable and universally acceptable companion in the domestic circles.’

Leading and Scientific Articles.

"Its leading and scientific articles are the very pattern of cheap journalism."—Saturday Review.
"There is a well-considered leading article or essay, every week, upon some subject of an instructive or thoughtful character."—British Quarterly Review.

Novels and Tales.

"Its novels and tales are quite as well written as the best circulating library stories."—Saturday Review.
"Under the head of the "Story Teller," we have novels and tales simpler and purer in structure than in the pages of the other penny serials."—British Quarterly Review.

Poetry.

"There are charming verses let into its pages, like sunshine, to brighten them."—British Quarterly Review.

Answers to Correspondents.

"For amusing reading, such as may be admitted to one's household without fear of consequences, we may recommend the "Family Herald," the father of this class of publications. For one penny you get a portion of a well-written novel, two or three novelettes, a lot of useful information interspersed throughout, a page of answers to correspondents, alone worth the penny, and a variety of other matters, which will make readers either merrier or wiser, or perhaps both."—British Quarterly Review.

The Bookseller.

"The Family Herald" may be considered the "Paterfamilias" of the whole stock of penny weekly serials. It is well considered, with reference to its aims, and is various and amusing, with a fair amount of utility intermixed. Then there is a little column of receipts and instructions in household matters; gleanings of small facts, useful and scientific; a few scraps of statistics; chess problems and riddles; and an anthology of stray humour and miscellaneous. Of all these publications, we are inclined to consider the "Family Herald" the best.'—Leigh Hunt.

Literary Gazette.

"It must be said of the "Family Herald" that it is the purest reading of all purely amusing literature; it is, indeed, a family paper."—Saturday Review.

"The Family Herald" stands at the head, both in age and popularity, of all the penny serials.'

GRATITUDE.

London, 3, Quickset Place, King's Cross, March 28th, 1864.

Gentlemen,—It has often been on my mind to write to you, to thank you for your excellent medicine Park's Life Pills, which have been of the greatest benefit to me. It is fully twenty years since I first took this medicine, when I was afflicted with those ailments peculiar to women; I received immediate relief and speedy enjoyment of good health, which I have enjoyed now for the past twenty years; and I declare to you that I have never taken any other medicine.

I write this letter simply to express to you my gratitude; but, if you think its publication in the newspapers will lead other young persons to benefit from my experience, you have my permission to publish it.—I am, Gentlemen, yours very respectfully,

Lucy Collin.

EPIDEMIC OF TYPHUS FEVER.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL.

Experience has demonstrated, in the most unequivocal manner, that persons suffering from Contagious Fevers cannot be treated in General Hospitals without great risk of the fever spreading to an alarming extent among the other patients.

The London Fever Hospital is the only Institution in the Metropolis for the treatment of Contagious Fevers, and for the protection of the public from the spread of contagion. It differs from almost all other Hospitals in conferring direct benefits upon all classes of the community—upon the rich as well as upon the poor. It is capable of accommodating 260 patients.

Typhus and Scarlet Fever have rarely, if ever, been so prevalent in London as during the last two years. In the last six months alone no fewer than 1680? patients have been admitted into the London Fever Hospital.

To meet the exigencies of the present epidemic, the Committee of Management, at the commencement of the winter, resolved to increase the accommodation by the erection of additional wards. These wards have now been open for several months, and have enabled the medical officers to admit a large number of patients, who must otherwise have been sent back to propagate the epidemic in their crowded houses.

The Committee earnestly appeal to the Public for AID to enable them to meet the enormous increase in their current expenses, and to continue the good work entrusted to them.

A Donor of Ten Guineas, or an Annual Subscriber of One Guinea, becomes a Governor of the Hospital.

Subscriptions and Donations may be paid to the Treasurer, J. C. DIMSDALE, Esq.; to Messrs. DIMSDALE, DREWETT & Co., 40 Cornhill; BARCLAY & Co., Lombard Street; Coutts & Co., Strand; Drummond & Co., Charing Cross; Hoare & Co., Fleet Street; and to the Honorary Secretary, at the Hospital, Liverpool Road, Islington, N.

Signed on behalf of the Committee,

APRIL, 1864.

HUGH OWEN, Hon. Sec.
THOSE whose admiration of Shakespeare has led them to make a pilgrimage to the birthplace of the immortal bard, in honour of the anniversary of his three hundredth birthday, are performing a twofold mission. They are paying homage to the memory of a poet who clothed the sublimest thoughts in the very perfection of verbal adornment, but they are no less celebrating the advent of a school of literature destined to become a powerful instrument for the elevation of the popular taste in manners, morals, and in costume.

The art of poetry may be said to have risen to the highest point of excellence in the Tudor period—for Shakespeare remains unrivalled. But in manners and in morals it required centuries to produce a revolution as complete as that effected by the poet in the expression of thought; while the no less important reform in the habiliments wherever we clothe the 'human form divine,' is still an open subject for the pen of a modern Shakespeare, who will 'Shoot winged Folly as she flies,' and exert his powers of ridicule against the common practice of 'overstepping the modesty of nature,' and retaining the Elizabethan farthingale, the only effect of which is to make a lady appear (to use the words of Sir Roger de Coverley) 'as if she stood in a large drum.' That the expansive skirt is not only defensible on the ground of its graceful appearance, but also an improvement on account of its comfort as a walking costume, may be justly inferred from its modern revival and general adoption; but it is more than ordinarily remarkable that its manufacture should be confined, with one solitary exception, to the antiquated, unsightly, and dangerous system of surrounding the body with iron hoops, which is as much an anachronism at the present day as would be the use of the fingers instead of spoons, or the introduction of wooden skewers in place of hooks-and-eyes.

What is wanted, then, is not a Punch, who levels his witty shafts at a folly without discovering a remedy, but one who, with burning words and sparkling epigrams, will, to quote the expression of Hamlet, 'reform it altogether,' by contrasting the symmetrical form and graceful outline of the lady who wears Thomson's Prize Medal Watch-Spring Crinolines, with the beauty who renders herself as unlovely as possible by balloon or barrel-like disfigurement. For this important duty

'We want a Shakespeare, an uncommon want;'
and when he has fulfilled his noble task, and abolished that which, not to be abolished, must remain a stain upon our national taste,

'Your daughter's daughters shall confess his power,
Till language fail or time shall be no more.'

To find such a one, Messrs. Thomson have given ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS as prizes for the best poetic compositions written by the poets of 1864; these will soon be offered to the public in the form of Pamphlet, Illustrated with

INSTANT relief and a rapid cure of ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, INFLUENZA, COXSACK, and all disorders of the breath, throat, and lungs, are insured by which have a most agreeable taste.

QUITE OF CONSUMPTIVE COUGH.—From J. Pratt, chemist, Stafford-st., Wolverhampton.—A lady had been suffering from a severe consumptive cough for 12 or 13 years, and, after consulting several physicians, was induced to try your Wafers. The first dose gave instantaneous relief, and she has not had another attack since.

Dr. Loocock’s Pulmonic Wafers give instant relief and a rapid cure of asthma, consumption, coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. All throat affections are immediately relieved by allowing one occasionally to dissolve in the mouth.

To singers and public speakers they are invaluable for clearing and strengthening the voice. They have a pleasant taste. Price Is. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 11s. per box. Sold by all medicine vendors.

CAUTION.—Every box of the genuine medicine has the words ‘Mr. Loocock’s Wafers’ in white letters on a red ground in the Government Stamp, without which words ALL ARE COUNTERFEITS AND AN IMPOSITION.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

JOSEPH GILLOTT,
METALLIC PEN MAKER TO THE QUEEN,

BEGS to inform the Commercial World, Scholastic Institutions, and the Public generally, that, by a novel application of his unrivalled Machinery for making Steel Pens, he has introduced a NEW SERIES of his useful productions, which, for EXCELLENCE OF TEMPER, QUALITY OF MATERIAL, and, above all, CHEAPNESS IN PRICE, must insure universal approbation, and defy competition.

Each Pen bears the impress of his name as a guarantee of quality. They are put up in boxes containing one gross each, with label outside, and the fac-simile of his signature.

At the request of numerous persons engaged in tuition, J. G. has introduced his WARRANTED SCHOOL and PUBLIC PENS, which are especially adapted to their use, being of different degrees of flexibility, and with fine, medium, and broad points, suitable for the various kinds of Writing taught in Schools.

Sold Retail by all Stationers and Booksellers. Merchants and Wholesale Dealers can be supplied at the Works, Graham-street, Birmingham; at 91 John-street, New York; and at 37 Gracechurch-street, London.

CAUTION.—CHLORODYNE.
IN CHANCERY.

It was clearly proved, before Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood, by affidavits from eminent Hospital Physicians of London, that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was the Discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. BROWNE'S.—See Times, Jan. 12, 1864. The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times, when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while Medical Men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Whooping-Cough, Neuralgia, Diarrhcea, Rheumatism, Spasms, &c.

From J. M'GRIGOR CROFT, M.D., M.R.C. Physicians, London, late Staff-Surgeon to H.M.F.

After prescribing Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, for the last three years, in severe cases of Neuralgia and Tic Dolorous, I feel that I am in a position to testify to its valuable effects. Really in some cases it acted as a charm, when all other means had failed. Without being asked for this report, I must come forward and state my candid opinion that it is a most valuable medicine."

From JNO. E. GOULSTONE, M.D., Knighton.

"I can confidently state that Chlorodyne is an admirable Sedative and Anti-Spasmodic, having used it in Neuralgia, Hysteria, Asthma, and Consumption with remarkably favourable results. It relieved a fit of Asthma in four minutes, where the patient had suffered 11 years in a most distressing manner, no previous remedy having had so immediate and beneficial an effect."

CAUTION.—To avoid Spurious Compounds or Imitations of 'Chlorodyne,' always ask for 'Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE,' and see that his name is on the Government Stamp of each Bottle. Sold only in Bottles, at 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

CHAPTER I.

ON THE LOOK OUT.

In these times of ours, though concerning the exact year there is no need to be precise, a boat of dirty and disreputable appearance, with two figures in it, floated on the Thames, between Southwark Bridge which is of iron, and London Bridge which is of stone, as an autumn evening was closing in. The figures in this boat were those of a strong man with ragged grizzled hair and a sun-browned face, and a dark girl of nineteen or twenty, sufficiently like him to be recognizable as his daughter. The girl rowed, pulling a pair of sculls very easily; the man, with the rudder-lines slack in his hands, and his hands loose in his waistband, kept an eager look out. He had no net, hook, or line, and he could not be a fisherman; his boat had no cushion for a sitter, no paint, no inscription, no appliance beyond a rusty boat-hook and a coil of rope, and he could not be a waterman; his boat was too crazy and too small to take in cargo for delivery, and he could not be a lighterman or river-carrier; there was no clue to what he looked for, but he looked for something, with a most intent and searching gaze. The tide, which had turned an hour before, was running down, and his eyes watched every little race and eddy in its broad sweep, as the boat made slight head-way against it, or drove stern foremost before it, according as he directed his daughter by a movement of his head. She watched his face as earnestly as he watched the river. But, in the intensity of her look there was a touch of dread or horror.

Allied to the bottom of the river rather than the surface, by reason of the slime and ooze with which it was covered, and its sodden state, this boat and the two figures in it obviously were doing something that they often did, and were seeking what they often sought. Half savage as the man showed, with no covering on his matted head, with his brown arms bare to between the elbow and the shoulder, with the loose knot of a looser kerchief lying low on his bare breast in a wilderness of beard and whisker, with such dress as he wore seeming to be made out of the mud that begrimed his boat, still there was business-like usage in his steady gaze. So with every lithe action of the girl, with every turn of her wrist, perhaps most of all with her look of dread or horror; they were things of usage.

"Keep her out, Lizzie. Tide runs strong here. Keep her well afore the sweep of it."

Trusting to the girl’s skill and making no use of the rudder, he eyed the coming tide with an absorbed attention. So the girl eyed him. But, it happened now, that a slant of light from the setting sun glanced into the bottom of the boat, and, touching a rotten stain there which bore some resemblance to the outline of a muffled human form, coloured it as though with diluted blood. This caught the girl’s eye, and she shivered.

"What ails you?" said the man, immediately aware of it, though so intent on the advancing waters; "I see nothing afloat."

The red light was gone, the shudder was gone, and his gaze, which had come back to the boat for a moment, travelled away again. Wheresoever the strong tide met with an impediment, his gaze paused for an instant. At every mooring-chain and rope, at every stationary boat or barge that split the current into a broad-arrow-head, at the offsets from the piers of Southwark Bridge, at the paddles of the river steamboats as they beat the filthy water, at the floating logs of timber lashed together lying off certain wharves, his shining eyes darted a hungry look. After a darkening hour or so, suddenly the rudder-lines tightened in his hold, and he steered hard towards the Surrey shore.

Always watching his face, the girl instantly answered to the action in her sculling; presently the boat swung round, quivered as from a sudden jerk, and the upper half of the man was stretched out over the stern.

The girl pulled the hood of a cloak she wore, over her head and over her face, and, looking backward so that the front folds of this hood were turned down the river, kept the boat in that direction going before the tide. Until now, the boat had barely held her own, and had hovered about one spot; but now, the banks changed swiftly, and the deepening shadows and the kindling lights of London Bridge were passed, and the tiers of shipping lay on either hand.

It was not until now that the upper half of the man came back into the boat. His arms were wet and dirty, and he washed them over the side. In his right hand he held something, and he washed that in the river too. It was money. He chinked it once, and he blew upon it once, and he spat upon it once,—"for luck," he hoarsely said—before he put it in his pocket.

"Lizzie!"

The girl turned her face towards him with a start, and rowed in silence. Her face was very pale. He was a hook-nosed man, and with that and his bright eyes and his ruffled head, bore a certain likeness to a roused bird of prey.

"Take that thing off your face."

She put it back.
"Here! and give me hold of the sculls. I'll take the rest of the spell."
"No, no, father! No! I can't indeed. Father!—I cannot sit so near it!"

He was moving towards her to change places, but her terrified expostulation stopped him and he resumed his seat.
"What hurt can it do you?"
"None, none. But I cannot bear it."
"It's my belief you hate the sight of the very river."
"I—I do not like it, father."
"As if it wasn't your living! As if it wasn't meat and drink to you!"

At these latter words the girl shivered again, and for a moment paused in her rowing, seeming to turn deadly faint. It escaped his attention, for he was glancing over the stern at something the boat had in tow.

"How can you be so thankless to your best friend, Lizzie? The very fire that warmed you when you were a babby, was picked out of the river alongside the coal barges. The very basket that you slept in, the tide washed ashore. The very rockers that I put it upon to make a cradle of it, I cut out of a piece of wood that drifted from some ship or another."

Lizzie took her right hand from the scull it held, and touched her lips with it, and for a moment held it out lovingly towards him; then, without speaking, she resumed her rowing, as another boat of similar appearance, though in rather better trim, came out from a dark place and dropped softly alongside.

"In luck again, Gaffer?" said a man with a squinting leer, who sculled her and who was alone. "I know'd you was in luck again, by your wake as you come down."

"Ah!" replied the other, drily. "So you're out, are you?"

"Yes, pardner."

There was now a tender yellow moonlight on the river, and the new comer, keeping half his boat's length astern of the other boat, looked hard at its track.

"I says to myself," he went on, "directly you have in view, Yonder's Gaffer, and in luck again, by George if he ain't! Scull it is, pardner—don't fret yourself—I didn't touch him." This was in answer to a quick impatient movement on the part of Gaffer: the speaker at the same time unshipping his scull on that side, and laying his hand on the gunwale of Gaffer's boat and holding to it.

"He's had touches enough not to want no more, as well as I make him out, Gaffer! Been a knocking about with a pretty many tides, ain't he pardner? Such is my out-of-luck ways, you see! He must have passed me when he went up last time, for I was on the look-out below bridge here. I a'most think you're like the wulturs, pardner, and scent 'em out."

He spoke in a dropped voice, and with more than one glance at Lizzie who had pulled on her hood again. Both men then looked with a weird unholy interest at the wake of Gaffer's boat.

"Easy does it, betwixt us. Shall I take him aboard, pardner?"

"No," said the other. In so surly a tone that the man, after a blank stare, acknowledged it with the retort:
"—Arn’t been eating nothing as has disagreed with you, have you, pardner?"

"Why, yes, I have," said Gaffer. "I have been swallowing too much of that word, Pardner. I am no pardner of yours."

"Since when was you no pardner of mine, Gaffer Hexam Esquire?"

"Since you was accused of robbing a man. Accused of robbing a live man!" said Gaffer, with great indignation.

"And what if I had been accused of robbing a dead man, Gaffer?"

"You couldn’t do it."

"Couldn’t you, Gaffer?"

"No. Has a dead man any use for money? Is it possible for a dead man to have money? What world does a dead man belong to? Tother world. What world does money belong to? This world. How can money be a corpse’s? Can a corpse own it, want it, spend it, claim it, miss it? Don’t try to go confounding the rights and wrongs of things in that way. But it’s worthy of the sneaking spirit that robs a live man."

"I’ll tell you what it is——"

"No you won’t. I’ll tell you what it is. You’ve got off with a short time of it for putting your hand in the pocket of a sailor, a live sailor. Make the most of it and think yourself lucky, but don’t think after that to come over me with your pardners. We have worked together in time past, but we work together no more in time present nor yet future. Let go. Cast off!"

"Gaffer! If you think to get rid of me this way——"

"If I don’t get rid of you this way, I’ll try another, and chop you over the fingers with the stretcher, or take a pick at your head with the boat-hook. Cast off! Pull you, Lizzie. Pull home, since you won’t let your father pull."

Lizzie shot ahead, and the other boat fell astern. Lizzie’s father, composing himself into the easy attitude of one who had asserted the high moralities and taken an unassailable position, slowly lighted a pipe, and smoked, and took a survey of what he had in tow. What he had in tow, lunged itself at him sometimes in an awful manner when the boat was checked, and sometimes seemed to try to wrench itself away, though for the most part it followed submissively. A neophyte might have fancied that the ripples passing over it were dreadfully like faint changes of expression on a sightless face; but Gaffer was no neophyte and had no fancies.

CHAPTER II.

THE MAN FROM SOMEWHERE.

Mr. and Mrs. Veneering were bran-new people in a bran-new house in a bran-new quarter of London. Everything about the Veneerings was spick and span new. All their furniture was new, all their friends were new, all their servants were new, their plate was new, their carriage was new, their harness was new, their horses were new, their pictures were new, they themselves were new, they were as newly married as was lawfully compatible with their having a bran-new baby, and if they had set up a great-grandfather, he would have come home in matting from the Pantechnicon, without a scratch upon him, French polished to the crown of his head.

For, in the Veneering establishment, from the hall-chairs with the new coat of arms, to the grand pianoforte with the new action, and upstairs again to the new fire-escape, all things were in a state of high varnish and polish. And what was observable in the furniture, was observable in the Veneerings—the surface smelt a little too much of the workshop and was a trifle stickey.

There was an innocent piece of dinner-furniture that went upon easy castors and was kept over a livery stable-yard in Duke Street, Saint James's, when not in use, to whom the Veneerings were a source of blind confusion. The name of this article was Twemlow. Being first cousin to Lord Snigsworth, he was in frequent requisition, and at many houses might be said to represent the dining-table in its normal state. Mr. and Mrs. Veneering, for example, arranging a dinner, habitually started with Twemlow, and then put leaves in him, or added guests to him. Sometimes, the table consisted of Twemlow and half a dozen leaves; sometimes, of Twemlow and a dozen leaves; sometimes, Twemlow was pulled out to his utmost extent of twenty leaves. Mr. and Mrs. Veneering on occasions of ceremony faced each other in the centre of the board, and thus the parallel still held; for, it always happened that the more Twemlow was pulled out, the further he found himself from the centre, and the nearer to the sideboard at one end of the room, or the window-curtains at the other.

But, it was not this which steeped the feeble soul of Twemlow in confusion. This he was used to, and could take soundings of. The abyss to which he could find no bottom, and from which started forth the engrossing and ever-swelling difficulty of his life, was the insoluble question whether he was Veneering's oldest friend, or newest friend. To the excogitation of this problem, the harmless gentleman had devoted many anxious hours, both in his lodgings over the livery stable-yard, and in the cold gloom, favourable to meditation, of Saint James's Square. Thus. Twemlow had first known Veneering at his club, where Veneering then knew nobody but the man who made them known to one another, who seemed to be the most intimate friend he had in the world, and whom he had known two days—the bond of union between their souls, the nefarious conduct of the committee respecting the cookery of a fillet of veal, having been accidently cemented at that date. Immediately upon this, Twemlow received an invitation to dine with Veneering, and dined: the man being of the party. Immediately upon that, Twemlow received an invitation to dine with the man, and dined: Veneering being of the party. At the man's were a Member, an Engineer, a Payer-off of the National Debt, a Poem on Shakespeare, a Grievance, and a Public Office, who all seemed to be utter strangers to Veneering. And yet immediately after that, Twemlow received an invitation to dine at Veneerings, expressly to meet the Member; the Engineer, the Payer-off of the National Debt, the Poem on Shakespeare, the Grievance, and the Public Office, and, dining, discovered that all of them were the most intimate friends Veneering had in the world, and that the wives of all of them (who were all there) were the objects of Mrs. Veneering’s most devoted affection and tender confidence.

Thus it had come about, that Mr. Twemlow had said to himself in his lodgings, with his hand to his forehead: “I must not think of this. This is enough to soften any man’s brain,” — and yet was always thinking of it, and could never form a conclusion.

This evening the Veneerings give a banquet. Eleven leaves in the Twemlow; fourteen in company all told. Four pigeon-breasted retainers in plain clothes stand in line in the hall. A fifth retainer, proceeding up the staircase with a mournful air — as who should say, “Here is another wretched creature come to dinner; such is life!” — announces, “Mis-ter Twemlow!”

Mrs. Veneering welcomes her sweet Mr. Twemlow. Mr. Veneering welcomes his dear Twemlow. Mrs. Veneering does not expect that Mr. Twemlow can in nature care much for such insipid things as babies, but so old a friend must please to look at baby. “Ah! You will know the friend of your family better, Tootleums,” says Mr. Veneering, nodding emotionally at that new article, “when you begin to take notice.” He then begs to make his dear Twemlow known to his two friends, Mr. Boots and Mr. Brewer — and clearly has no distinct idea which is which.

But now a fearful circumstance occurs.

“Mis-ter and Mis-sis Podsnap!”

“My dear,” says Mr. Veneering to Mrs. Veneering, with an air of much friendly interest, while the door stands open, “the Podsnaps.”

A too, too smiling large man, with a fatal freshness on him, appearing with his wife, instantly deserts his wife and darts at Twemlow with:

“How do you do? So glad to know you. Charming house you have here. I hope we are not late. So glad of this opportunity, I am sure!”

When the first shock fell upon him, Twemlow twice skipped back in his neat little shoes and his neat little silk stockings of a bygone fashion, as if impelled to leap over a sofa behind him; but the large man closed with him and proved too strong.

“Let me,” says the large man, trying to attract the attention of his wife in the distance, “have the pleasure of presenting Mrs. Podsnap to her host. She will be,” in his fatal freshness he seems to find perpetual verdure and eternal youth in the phrase, “she will be so glad of the opportunity, I am sure!”

In the meantime, Mrs. Podsnap, unable to originate a mistake on her own account, because Mrs. Veneering is the only other lady there, does her best in the way of handsomely supporting her husband’s, by looking towards Mr. Twemlow with a plaintive countenance and remarking to Mrs. Veneering in a feeling manner, firstly, that she fears he has been rather bilious of late, and, secondly, that the baby is already very like him.

It is questionable whether any man quite relishes being mistaken for any other man; but, Mr. Veneering having this very evening set up the shirt-front of the young Antinous (in new worked cambric just come home), is not at all complimented by being supposed to be Twemlow, who is dry and weazen and some thirty years older. Mrs. Veneering equally resents the imputation of being the wife of Twemlow. As to Twemlow, he is so sensible of being a much better bred man than Veneering, that he considers the large man an offensive ass.

In this complicated dilemma, Mr. Veneering approaches the large man with extended hand and, smilingly assures that incorrigible personage that he is delighted to see him; who in his fatal freshness instantly replies :

"Thank you. I am ashamed to say that I cannot at this moment recall where we met, but I am so glad of this opportunity, I am sure!"

Then pouncing upon Twemlow, who holds back with all his feeble might, he is halting him off to present him, as Veneering, to Mrs.
Podsnap, when the arrival of more guests unravels the mistake.
Whereupon, having re-shaken hands with Veneering as Veneering, he re-shakes hands with Twemlow as Twemlow, and winds it all up to his own perfect satisfaction by saying to the last-named, "Ridiculous opportunity—but so glad of it, I am sure!"

Now, Twemlow having undergone this terrific experience, having likewise noted the fusion of Boots in Brewer and Brewer in Boots, and having further observed that of the remaining seven guests four discreet characters enter with wandering eyes and wholly decline to commit themselves as to which is Veneering, until Veneering has them in his grasp;—Twemlow having profited by these studies, finds his brain wholesomely hardening as he approaches the conclusion that he really is Veneering's oldest friend, when his brain softens again and all is lost, through his eyes encountering Veneering and the large man linked together as twin brothers in the back drawing-room near the conservatory door, and through his ears informing him in the tones of Mrs. Veneering that the same large man is to be baby's godfather.

"Dinner is on the table!"

Thus the melancholy retainer, as who should say, "Come down and be poisoned, ye unhappy children of men!"

Twemlow, having no lady assigned him, goes down in the rear, with his hand to his forehead. Boots and Brewer, thinking him indisposed, whisper, "Man faint. Had no lunch." But he is only stunned by the unvanquishable difficulty of his existence.

Revived by soup, Twemlow discourses mildly of the Court Circular with Boots and Brewer. Is appealed to, at the fish stage of the banquet, by Veneering; on the disputed question whether his cousin Lord Snigsworth is in or out of town? Gives it that his cousin is out of town. "At Snigsworth Park?" Veneering inquires. "At Snigsworth," Twemlow rejoins. Boots and Brewer regard this as a man to be cultivated; and Veneering is clear that he is a remu-nervative article. Meantime the retainer goes round, like a gloomy Analytical Chemist: always seeming to say, after "Chablis, sir?"
—"You wouldn't if you knew what it's made of."

The great looking-glass above the sideboard, reflects the table and the company. Reflects the new Veneering crest, in gold and eke in silver, frosted and also thawed, a camel of all work. The Heralds' College found out a Crusading ancestor for Veneering who boro a camel on his shield (or might have done it if he had thought of it), and a caravan of camels take charge of the fruits and flowers and candles, and kneel down to be loaded with the salt. Reflects Veneering: forty, wavy-haired, dark, tending to corpulence, sly, mysterious, filmy—a kind of sufficiently well-looking veiled- prophet, not prophesying. Reflects Mrs. Veneering: fair, aquiline-nosed and fingered, not so much light hair as she might have, gorgeous in raiment and jewels, enthusiastic, propitiatory, conscious that a corner of her husband's veil is over herself. Reflects Podsnap: prosperously feeding, two little light-coloured wavy wings, one on either side of his else bald head, looking as like his hairbrushes as his hair, dissolving view of red beads on his forehead, large allowance of crumpled shirt-collar up behind. Reflects Mrs. Podsnap: fine woman for Professor Owen, quantity of bone, neck and nostrils like a rocking-horse, hard features, majestic head-dress in which Podsnap has hung golden offerings. Reflects Twemlow: grey, dry, polite, susceptible to east wind, First-Gentleman-in-Europe collar and cravat, cheeks drawn in as if he had made a great effort to retire into himself some years ago, and had got so far and had never got any farther. Reflects mature young lady; raven locks, and complexion that lights up well when well powdered—as it is—carrying on considerably in the captivation of mature young gentleman; with too much nose in his face, too much ginger in his whiskers, too much torso in his waistcoat, too much sparkle in his studs, his eyes, his buttons, his talk, and his teeth. Reflects charming old Lady Tippins on Veneering's right; with an immense obtuse drab oblong face, like a face in a tablespoon, and a dyed Long Walk up the top of her head, as a convenient public approach to the bunch of false hair behind, pleased to patronize Mrs. Veneering opposite, who is pleased to be patronized. Reflects a certain "Mortimer," another of Veneering's oldest friends; who never was in the house before, and appears not to want to come again, who sits disconsolate on Mrs. Veneering's left, and who was inveigled by Lady Tippins (a friend of his boyhood) to come to these people's and talk, and who won't talk. Reflects Eugene, friend of Mortimer; buried alive in the back of his chair, behind a shoulder—with a powdered epaulette on it—of the mature young lady, and gloomily resorting to the champagne chalice whenever proffered by the Analytical Chemist. Lastly, the looking-glass reflects Boots and Brewer, and two other stuffed Buffers interposed between the rest of the company and possible accidents.

The Veneering dinners are excellent dinners—or new people wouldn't come—and all goes well. Notably, Lady Tippins has made a series of experiments on her digestive functions, so extremely complicated and daring, that if they could be published with their results it might benefit the human race. Having taken in provisions from all parts of the world, this hardy old cruiser has last touched at the North Pole, when, as the ice-plates are being removed, the following words fall from her:

"I assure you, my dear Veneering—"

(Poor Twemlow's hand approaches his forehead, for it would seem now, that Lady Tippins is going to be the oldest friend.)

"I assure you, my dear Veneering, that it is the oddest affair! Like the advertising people, I don't ask you to trust me, without offering..."
a respectable reference. Mortimer there, is my reference, and knows all about it."

Mortimer raises his drooping eyelids, and slightly opens his mouth. But a faint smile, expressive of "What's the use?" passes over his face, and he drops his eyelids and shuts his mouth.

"Now, Mortimer," says Lady Tippins, rapping the sticks of her closed green fan upon the knuckles of her left hand—which is particularly rich in knuckles, "I insist upon your telling all that is to be told about the man from Jamaica."

"Give you my honor I never heard of any man from Jamaica, except the man who was a brother," replies Mortimer.

"Tobago, then."

"Nor yet from Tobago."

"Except," Eugene strikes in: so unexpectedly that the mature young lady, who has forgotten all about him, with a start takes the epaulette out of his way: "except our friend who long lived on rice-pudding and isinglass, till at length to his something or other, his physician said something else, and a leg of mutton somehow ended in daygo."

A reviving impression goes round the table that Eugene is coming out. An unfilled impression, for he goes in again.

"Now, my dear Mrs. Veneering," quoth Lady Tippins, "I appeal to you whether this is not the basest conduct ever known in this world? I carry my lovers about, two or three at a time, on condition that they are very obedient and devoted; and here is my old lover-in-chief, the head of all my slaves, throwing off his allegiance before company! And here is another of my lovers, a rough Cymon at present certainly, but of whom I had most hopeful expectations as to his turning out well in course of time, pretending that he can't remember his nursery rhymes! On purpose to annoy me, for he knows how I doat upon them!"

A grisly little fiction concerning her lovers is Lady Tippins's point. She is always attended by a lover or two, and she keeps a little list of her lovers, and she is always booking a new lover, or striking out an old lover, or putting a lover in her black list, or promoting a lover to her blue list, or adding up her lovers, or otherwise posting her book. Mrs. Veneering is charmed by the humour, and so is Veneering. Perhaps it is enhanced by a certain yellow play in Lady Tippins's throat, like the legs of scratching poultry.

"I banish the false wretch from this moment, and I strike him out of my Cupidon (my name for my Ledger, my dear,) this very night. But I am resolved to have the account of the man from Somewhere. And I beg you to elicit it for me, my love," to Mrs. Veneering, "as I have lost my own influence. Oh, you perjured man!" This to Mortimer, with a rattle of her fan.

"We are all very much interested in the man from Somewhere," Veneering observes.

Then the four Buffers, taking heart of grace all four at once, say:

- "Deeply interested!"
- "Quite excited!"
- "Dramatic!"
- "Man from Nowhere, perhaps!"
And then Mrs. Veneering—for Lady Tippins’s winning wiles are contagious—folds her hands in the manner of a supplicating child, turns to her left neighbour, and says, “Tease! Pay! Man from Twemlow!” At which the four Buffers, again mysteriously moved all four at once, exclaim, “You can’t resist!”

“Upon my life,” says Mortimer languidly, “I find it immensely embarrassing to have the eyes of Europe upon me to this extent, and my only consolation is that you will all of you execute Lady Tippins in your secret hearts when you find, as you inevitably will, the man from Somewhere a bore. Sorry to destroy romance by fixing him with a local habitation, but he comes from the place, the name of which escapes me, but will suggest itself to everybody else here, where they make the wine.”

Eugene suggests “Day and Martin’s.”

“No, not that place,” returns the unmoved Mortimer, “that’s where they make the Port. My man comes from the country where they make the Cape Wine. But look here, old fellow; it’s not at all statistical and it’s rather odd.”

It is always noticeable at the table of the Veneerings, that no man troubles himself much about the Veneerings themselves, and that anyone who has anything to tell, generally tells it to anybody else in preference.

“The man,” Mortimer goes on, addressing Eugene, “whose name is Harmon, was only son of a tremendous old rascal who made his money by Dust.”

“Red velveteens and a bell?” the gloomy Eugene inquires.

“And a ladder and basket if you like. By which means, or by others, he grew rich as a Dust Contractor, and lived in a hollow in a hilly country entirely composed of Dust. On his own small estate the growling old vagabond threw up his own mountain range, like an old volcano, and its geological formation was Dust. Coal-dust, vegetable-dust, bone-dust, crockery dust, rough dust and sifted dust,—all manner of Dust.”

A passing remembrance of Mrs. Veneering, here induces Mortimer to address his next half-dozen words to her; after which he wanders away again, tries Twemlow and finds he doesn’t answer, ultimately takes up with the Buffers who receive him enthusiastically.

“The moral being—I believe that’s the right expression—of this exemplary person, derived its highest gratification from anathematizing his nearest relations and turning them out of doors. Having begun (as was natural) by rendering these attentions to the wife of his bosom, he next found himself at leisure to bestow a similar recognition on the claims of his daughter. He chose a husband for her, entirely to his own satisfaction and not in the least to hers, and proceeded to settle upon her, as her marriage portion, I don’t know how much Dust, but something immense. At this stage of the affair the poor girl respectfully intimated that she was secretly engaged to that popular character whom the novelists and versifiers call Another, and that such a marriage would make Dust of her heart and Dust of her life—in short, would set her up, on a very extensive scale, in her father’s business. Immediately, the venerable parent—on a cold winter’s night, it is said—anathematized and turned her out.”
Here, the Analytical Chemist (who has evidently formed a very low opinion of Mortimer's story) concedes a little claret to the Buffers; who, again mysteriously moved all four at once, screw it slowly into themselves with a peculiar twist of enjoyment, as they cry in chorus, "Pray go on."

"The pecuniary resources of Another were, as they usually are, of a very limited nature. I believe I am not using too strong an expression when I say that Another was hard up. However, he married the young lady, and they lived in a humble dwelling, probably possessing a porch ornamented with honeysuckle and woodbine twining, until she died. I must refer you to the Registrar of the District in which the humble dwelling was situated, for the certified cause of death; but early sorrow and anxiety may have had to do with it, though they may not appear in the ruled pages and printed forms. Indisputably this was the case with Another, for he was so cut up by the loss of his young wife that if he outlived her a year it was as much as he did."

There is that in the indolent Mortimer, which seems to hint that if good society might on any account allow itself to be impresible, he, one of good society, might have the weakness to be impressed by what he here relates. It is hidden with great pains, but it is in him. The gloomy Eugene too, is not without some kindred touch; for, when that appalling Lady Tippins declares that if Another had survived, he should have gone down at the head of her list of lovers—and also when the mature young lady shrugs her epaulettes, and laughs at some private and confidential comment from the mature young gentleman—his gloom deepens to that degree that he trifles quite ferociously with his dessert-knife.

Mortimer proceeds.

"We must now return, as the novelists say, and as we all wish they wouldn't, to the man from Somewhere. Being a boy of fourteen, cheaply educating at Brussels when his sister's expulsion befell, it was some little time before he heard of it—probably from herself, for the mother was dead; but that I don't know. Instantly, he absconded, and came over here. He must have been a boy of spirit and resource, to get here on a stopped allowance of five sous a week; but he did it somehow, and he burst in on his father, and pleaded his sister's cause. Venerable parent promptly resorts to anathematization, and turns him out. Shocked and terrified boy takes flight, seeks his fortune, gets aboard ship, ultimately turns up on dry land among the Cape wine: small proprietor, farmer, grower—whatever you like to call it."

At this juncture, shuffling is heard in the hall, and tapping is heard at the dining-room door. Analytical Chemist goes to the door, confers angrily with unseen tapper, appears to become mollified by descrying reason in the tapping, and goes out.

"So he was discovered, only the other day, after having been expatriated about fourteen years."

A Buffer, suddenly astounding the other three, by detaching himself, and asserting individuality, inquires: "How discovered, and why?"
"Ah! To be sure. Thank you for reminding me. Venerable parent dies."

Same Buffer, emboldened by success, says: "When?"

"The other day. Ten or twelve months ago."

Same Buffer inquires with smartness, "What of?" But herein perishes a melancholy example; being regarded by the three other Buffers with a stony stare, and attracting no further attention from any mortal.

"Venerable parent," Mortimer repeats with a passing remembrance that there is a Veneering at table, and for the first time addressing him—"dies."

The gratified Veneering repeats, gravely, "dies," and folds his arms, and composes his brow to hear it out in a judicial manner, when he finds himself again deserted in the bleak world.

"His will is found," says Mortimer, catching Mrs. Podsnap's rocking-horse's eye. "It is dated very soon after the son's flight. It leaves the lowest of the range of dust-mountains, with some sort of a dwelling-house at its foot, to an old servant who is sole executor, and all the rest of the property—which is very considerable—to the son. He directs himself to be buried with certain eccentric ceremonies and precautions against his coming to life, with which I need not bore you, and that's all—except—" and this ends the story.

The Analytical Chemist returning, everybody looks at him. Not because anybody wants to see him, but because of that subtle influence in nature which impels humanity to embrace the slightest opportunity of looking at anything, rather than the person who addresses it.

"—Except that the son's inheriting is made conditional on his marrying a girl, who at the date of the will, was a child of four or five years old, and who is now a marriageable young woman. Advertisement and inquiry discovered the son in the man from Somewhere, and at the present moment, he is on his way home from there—no doubt, in a state of great astonishment—to succeed to a very large fortune, and to take a wife."

Mrs. Podsnap inquires whether the young person is a young person of personal charms? Mortimer is unable to report.

Mr. Podsnap inquires what would become of the very large fortune, in the event of the marriage condition not being fulfilled? Mortimer replies, that by special testamentary clause it would then go to the old servant above mentioned, passing over and excluding the son; also, that if the son had not been living, the same old servant would have been sole residuary legatee.

Mrs. Veneering has just succeeded in waking Lady Tippins from a snore, by dexterously shunting a train of plates and dishes at her knuckles across the table; when everybody but Mortimer himself becomes aware that the Analytical Chemist is, in a ghostly manner, offering him a folded paper. Curiosity detains Mrs. Veneering a few moments.

Mortimer, in spite of all the arts of the chemist, placidly refreshes himself with a glass of Madeira, and remains unconscious of the document which engrosses the general attention, until Lady Tippins (who has a habit of waking totally insensible), having remembered where she is, and recovered a perception of surrounding objects, says: "Falser man than Don Juan; why don't you take the note from the Commendatore?" Upon which, the chemist advances it under the nose of Mortimer, who looks round at him, and says:
"What's this?"

Analytical Chemist bends and whispers.
"Who?" says Mortimer.
Analytical Chemist again bends and whispers.
Mortimer stares at him, and unfolds the paper. Reads it, reads it twice, turns it over to look at the blank outside, reads it a third time.
"This arrives in an extraordinarily opportune manner," says Mortimer then, looking with an altered face round the table: "this is the conclusion of the story of the identical man."

"Already married?" one guesses.
"Declines to marry?" another guesses.
"Codicil among the dust?" another guesses.
"Why, no," says Mortimer; "remarkable thing, you are all wrong. The story is completer and rather more exciting than I supposed. Man's drowned!"

CHAPTER III.

ANOTHER MAN.

As the disappearing skirts of the ladies ascended the Veneering staircase, Mortimer, following them forth from the dining-room, turned into a library of bran-new books, in bran-new bindings liberally gilded, and requested to see the messenger who had brought the paper. He was a boy of about fifteen. Mortimer looked at the boy, and the boy looked at the bran-new pilgrims on the wall, going to Canterbury in more gold frame than procession, and more carving than country.
"Whose writing is this?"
"Mine, sir."
"Who told you to write it?"
"My father, Jesse Hexam."
"Is it he who found the body?"
"Yes, sir."
"What is your father?"

The boy hesitated, looked reproachfully at the pilgrims as if they had involved him in a little difficulty, then said, folding a plait in the right leg of his trousers, "He gets his living along-shore."
"Is it far?"
"Is which far?" asked the boy, upon his guard, and again upon the road to Canterbury.
"To your father's?"
"It's a goodish stretch, sir. I come up in a cab, and the cab's waiting to be paid. We could go back in it before you paid it, if you liked. I went first to your office, according to the direction of the papers found in the pockets, and there I see nobody but a chap of about my age who sent me on here."

There was a curious mixture in the boy, of uncompleted savagery, and uncompleted civilization. His voice was hoarse and coarse, and his face was coarse, and his stunted figure was coarse; but he was cleaner than other boys of his type; and his writing, though large and round, was good; and he glanced at the backs of the books, with an awakened curiosity that went below the binding. No one who can read, ever looks at a book, even unopened on a shelf, like one who cannot.

"Were any means taken, do you know, boy, to ascertain if it was possible to restore life?" Mortimer inquired, as he sought for his hat.

"You wouldn't ask, sir, if you knew his state. Pharaoh's multitude that were drowned in the Red Sea, ain't more beyond restoring to life. If Lazarus was only half as far gone, that was the greatest of all the miracles."

"Halloa!" cried Mortimer, turning round with his hat upon his head, "you seem to be at home in the Red Sea, my young friend?"

"Read of it with teacher at the school," said the boy.

"And Lazarus?"

"Yes, and him too. But don't you tell my father! We should have no peace in our place, if that got touched upon. It's my sister's contriving."

"You seem to have a good sister."

"She ain't half bad," said the boy; "but if she knows her letters it's the most she does—and then I learned her."

The gloomy Eugene, with his hands in his pockets, had strolled in and assisted at the latter part of the dialogue; when the boy spoke these words slightlyingly of his sister, he took him roughly enough by the chin, and turned up his face to look at it.

"Well, I'm sure, sir!" said the boy, resisting; "I hope you'll know me again."

Eugene vouchsafed no answer; but made the proposal to Mortimer, "I'll go with you, if you like?" So, they all three went away together in the vehicle that had brought the boy; the two friends (once boys together at a public school) inside, smoking cigars; the messenger on the box beside the driver.

"Let me see," said Mortimer, as they went along; "I have been, Eugene, upon the honourable roll of solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, and attorneys at Common Law, five years; and—except gratuitously taking instructions, on an average once a fortnight, for the will of Lady Tipping who has nothing to leave—I have had no scrap of business but this romantic business."

"And I," said Eugene, "have been 'called' seven years, and have had no business at all, and never shall have any. And if I had, I shouldn't know how to do it."

"I am far from being clear as to the last particular," returned Mortimer, with great composure, "that I have much advantage over you."

"I hate," said Eugene, putting his legs up on the opposite seat, "I hate my profession."
"Shall I incommode you, if I put mine up too?" returned Mortimer. "Thank you. I hate mine."

"It was forced upon me," said the gloomy Eugene, "because it was understood that we wanted a barrister in the family. We have got a precious one."

"It was forced upon me," said Mortimer, "because it was understood that we wanted a solicitor in the family. And we have got a precious one."

"There are four of us, with our names painted on a door-post in right of one black hole called a set of chambers," said Eugene; "and each of us has the fourth of a clerk—Cassim Baba, in the robber's cave—and Cassim is the only respectable member of the party."

"I am one by myself, one," said Mortimer, "high up an awful staircase commanding a burial-ground, and I have a whole clerk to myself, and he has nothing to do but look at the burial-ground, and what he will turn out when arrived at maturity, I cannot conceive. Whether, in that shabby rook's nest, he is always plotting wisdom, or plotting murder; whether he will grow up, after so much solitary brooding, to enlighten his fellow-creatures, or to poison them; is the only speck of interest that presents itself to my professional view. Will you give me a light? Thank you."

"Then idiots talk," said Eugene, leaning back, folding his arms, smoking with his eyes shut, and speaking slightly through his nose, "of Energy. If there is a word in the dictionary under any letter from A to Z that I abominate, it is energy. It is such a conventional superstition, such parrot gabble! What the deuce! Am I to rush out into the street, collar the first man of a wealthy appearance that I meet, shake him, and say, 'Go to law upon the spot, you dog, and retain me, or I'll be the death of you?' Yet that would be energy."

"Precisely my view of the case, Eugene. But show me a good opportunity, show me something really worth being energetic about, and I'll show you energy."

"And so will I," said Eugene.

And it is likely enough that ten thousand other young men, within the limits of the London Post-office town delivery, made the same hopeful remark in the course of the same evening.

The wheels rolled on, and rolled down by the Monument and by the Tower, and by the Docks; down by Ratcliffe, and by Rotherhithe; down by where accumulated scum of humanity seemed to be washed from higher grounds, like so much moral sewage, and to be pausing until its own weight forced it over the bank and sunk it in the river. In and out among vessels that seemed to have got ashore, and houses that seemed to have got afloat—among bowsprits staring into windows, and windows staring into ships—the wheels rolled on, until they stopped at a dark corner, river-washed and otherwise not washed at all, where the boy alighted and opened the door.

"You must walk the rest, sir; it's not many yards." He spoke in the singular number, to the express exclusion of Eugene.

"This is a confoundedly out-of-the-way place," said Mortimer, slipping over the stones and refuse on the shore, as the boy turned the corner sharp.
"Here's my father's, sir; where the light is."

The low building had the look of having once been a mill. There was a rotten wart of wood upon its forehead that seemed to indicate where the sails had been, but the whole was very indistinctly seen in the obscurity of the night. The boy lifted the latch of the door, and they passed at once into a low circular room, where a man stood before a red fire, looking down into it, and a girl sat engaged in needlework. The fire was in a rusty brazier, not fitted to the hearth; and a common lamp, shaped like a hyacinth-root, smoked and flared in the neck of a stone bottle on the table. There was a wooden bunk or berth in a corner, and in another corner a wooden stair leading above—so clumsy and steep that it was little better than a ladder. Two or three old sculls and oars stood against the wall, and against another part of the wall was a small dresser, making a spare show of the commonest articles of crockery and cooking-vessels. The roof of the room was not plastered, but was formed of the flooring of the room above. This, being very old, knotted, seamed, and beamed, gave a lowering aspect to the chamber; and roof, and walls, and floor, alike abounding in old smears of flour, red-lead (or some such stain which it had probably acquired in warehousing), and damp, alike had a look of decomposition.

"The gentleman, father."

The figure at the red fire turned, raised its ruffled head, and looked like a bird of prey.

"You're Mortimer Lightwood Esquire; are you, sir?"

"Mortimer Lightwood is my name. What you found," said Mortimer, glancing rather shrinkingly towards the bunk; "is it here?"

"'Tain't not to say here, but it's close by. I do everything reg'lar. I've giv' notice of the circumstarnce to the police, and the police have took possession of it. No time ain't been lost, on any hand. The police have put it into print already, and here's what the print says of it."

Taking up the bottle with the lamp in it, he held it near a paper on the wall, with the police heading, Body Found. The two friends read the handbill as it stuck against the wall, and Gaffer read them as he held the light.

"Only papers on the unfortunate man, I see," said Lightwood, glancing from the description of what was found, to the finder.

"Only papers."

Here the girl arose with her work in her hand, and went out at the door.

"No money," pursued Mortimer; "but threepence in one of the skirt-pockets."

"The trousers pockets empty, and turned inside out."

Gaffer Hexam nodded. "But that's common. Whether it's the wash of the tide or no, I can't say. Now, here," moving the light to another similar placard, "his pockets was found empty, and turned inside out. And here," moving the light to another, "her pocket was found empty, and turned inside out. And so was this one's. And so was that one's. I can't read, nor I don't want to it, for I know 'em by their places on the wall. This one was a sailer, with two anchors and a flag and G. F. T. on his arm. Look and see if he warn't."

"Quite right."

"This one was the young woman in grey boots, and her linen marked with a cross. Look and see if she warn't."

"Quite right."

"This is him as had a nasty cut over the eye. This is them two young sisters what tied themselves together with a handkercher. This is the drunken old chap, in a pair of list slippers and a nightcap, wot had offered—it afterwards come out—to make a hole in the water for a quartern of rum stood aforehand, and kept to his word for the first and last time in his life. They pretty well papers the room, you see; but I know 'em all. I'm scholar enough!"

He waved the light over the whole, as if to typify the light of his scholarly intelligence, and then put it down on the table and stood behind it looking intently at his visitors. He had the special peculiarity of some birds of prey, that when he knitted his brow, his ruffled crest stood highest.

"You did not find all these yourself; did you?" asked Eugene.

To which the bird of prey slowly rejoined, "And what might your name be, now?"

"This is my friend," Mortimer Lightwood interposed; "Mr. Eugene Wrayburn."

"Mr. Eugene Wrayburn, is it? And what might Mr. Eugene Wrayburn have asked of me?"

"I asked you, simply, if you found all these yourself?"

"I answer you, simply, most on 'em."

"Do you suppose there has been much violence and robbery, beforehand, among these cases?"

"I don't suppose at all about it," returned Gaffer. "I ain't one of the supposing sort. If you'd got your living to haul out of the river every day of your life, you mightn't be much given to supposing. Am I to show the way?"

As he opened the door, in pursuance of a nod from Lightwood, an extremely pale and disturbed face appeared in the doorway—the face of a man much agitated.

"A body missing?" asked Gaffer Hexam, stopping short; "or a body found? Which?"

"I am lost!" replied the man, in a hurried and an eager manner

"Lost?"

"I—I am a stranger, and don't know the way. I—I want to find the place where I can see what is described here. It is possible I may know it." He was panting, and could hardly speak; but, he showed a copy of the newly-printed bill that was still wet upon the wall. Perhaps its newness, or perhaps the accuracy of his observation of its general look, guided Gaffer to a ready conclusion.

"This gentleman, Mr. Lightwood, is on that business."

"Mr. Lightwood?"

During a pause, Mortimer and the stranger confronted each other. Neither knew the other.

VOL. I. C
"I think, sir," said Mortimer, breaking the awkward silence with his airy self-possession, "that you did me the honor to mention my name?"

"I repeated it, after this man."

"You said you were a stranger in London?"

"An utter stranger."

"Are you seeking a Mr. Harmon?"

"No."

"Then I believe I can assure you that you are on a fruitless errand, and will not find what you fear to find. Will you come with us?"

A little winding through some muddy alleys that might have been deposited by the last ill-savoured tide, brought them to the wicket-gate and bright lamp of a Police Station; where they found the Night-Inspector, with a pen and ink, and ruler, posting up his books in a whitewashed office, as studiously as if he were in a monastery on the top of a mountain, and no howling fury of a drunken woman were banging herself against a cell-door in the back-yard at his elbow. With the same air of a recluse much given to study, he desisted from his books to bestow a distrustful nod of recognition upon Gaffer, plainly importing, "Ah! we know all about you, and you'll overdo it some day;" and to inform Mr. Mortimer Lightwood and friends, that he would attend them immediately. Then, he finished ruling the work he had in hand (it might have been illuminating a missal, he was so calm), in a very neat and methodical manner, showing not the slightest consciousness of the woman who was banging herself with increased violence, and shrieking most terrifically for some other woman's liver.

"A bull's-eye," said the Night-Inspector, taking up his keys. Which a deferential satellite produced. "Now, gentlemen."

With one of his keys, he opened a cool grot at the end of the yard, and they all went in. They quickly came out again, no one speaking but Eugene: who remarked to Mortimer, in a whisper, "Not much worse than Lady Tippins."

So, back to the whitewashed library of the monastery—with that liver still in shrieking requisition, as it had been loudly, while they looked at the silent sight they came to see—and there through the merits of the case as summed up by the Abbot. No clue to how body came into river. Very often was no clue. Too late to know for certain, whether injuries received before or after death; one excellent surgical opinion said, before; other excellent surgical opinion said, after. Steward of ship in which gentleman came home passenger, had been round to view, and could swear to identity. Likewise could swear to clothes. And then, you see, you had the papers, too. How was it he had totally disappeared on leaving ship, 'till found in river? Well! Probably had been upon some little game. Probably thought it a harmless game, wasn't up to things, and it turned out a fatal game. Inquest to-morrow, and no doubt open verdict.

"It appears to have knocked your friend over—knocked him completely off his legs," Mr. Inspector remarked, when he had finished his summing up. "It has given him a bad turn to be sure!" This was said in a very low voice, and with a searching look (not the first he had cast) at the stranger.

Mr. Lightwood explained that it was no friend of his.

"Indeed?" said Mr. Inspector, with an attentive ear; "where did you pick him up?"

Mr. Lightwood explained further.

Mr. Inspector had delivered his summing up, and had added these words, with his elbows leaning on his desk, and the fingers and thumb of his right hand, fitting themselves to the fingers and thumb of his left. Mr. Inspector moved nothing but his eyes, as he now added, raising his voice:

"Turned you faint, sir! Seems you're not accustomed to this kind of work?"

The stranger, who was leaning against the chimney-piece with drooping head, looked round and answered, "No. It's a horrible sight!"

"You expected to identify, I am told, sir?"

"Yes."

"Have you identified?"

"No. It's a horrible sight. O! a horrible, horrible sight!"

"Who did you think it might have been?" asked Mr. Inspector.

"Give us a description, sir. Perhaps we can help you."

"No, no," said the stranger; "it would be quite useless. Good-night."

Mr. Inspector had not moved, and had given no order; but, the satellite slipped his back against the wicket, and laid his left arm along the top of it, and with his right hand turned the bull's-eye he had taken from his chief—in quite a casual manner—towards the stranger.

"You missed a friend, you know; or you missed a foe, you know; or you wouldn't have come here, you know. Well, then; ain't it reasonable to ask, who was it?" Thus, Mr. Inspector.

"You must excuse my telling you. No class of man can understand better than you, that families may not choose to publish their disagreements and misfortunes, except on the last necessity. I do not dispute that you discharge your duty in asking me the question; you will not dispute my right to withhold the answer. Good-night."

Again he turned towards the wicket, where the satellite, with his eye upon his chief, remained a dumb statue.

"At least," said Mr. Inspector, "you will not object to leave me your card, sir?"

"I should not object, if I had one; but I have not." He reddened and was much confused as he gave the answer.

"At least," said Mr. Inspector, with no change of voice or manner, "you will not object to write down your name and address?"

"Not at all."

Mr. Inspector dipped a pen in his inkstand, and deftly laid it on a piece of paper close beside him; then resumed his former attitude. The stranger stepped up to the desk, and wrote in a rather tremulous hand—Mr. Inspector taking sidelong note of every hair of his head when it was bent down for the purpose—
"Mr. Julius Handford, Exchequor Coffee House, Palace Yard, Westminster."
"Staying there, I presume, sir?"
"Staying there."
"Consequently, from the country?"
"Eh? Yes—from the country."
"Good-night, sir."

The satellite removed his arm and opened the wicket, and Mr. Julius Handford went out.

"Reserve!" said Mr. Inspector. "Take care of this piece of paper, keep him in view without giving offence, ascertain that he is staying there, and find out anything you can about him."

The satellite was gone; and Mr. Inspector, becoming once again the quiet Abbot of that Monastery, dipped his pen in his ink and resumed his books. The two friends who had watched him, more amused by the professional manner than suspicious of Mr. Julius Handford, inquired before taking their departure, whether he believed there was anything that really looked bad here?

The Abbot replied with reticence, couldn't say. If a murder, anybody might have done it. Burglary or pocket-picking wanted prenticeship. Not so, murder. We were all of us up to that. Had seen scores of people come to identify, and never saw one person struck in that particular way. Might, however, have been Stomach and not Mind. If so, rum stomach. "But to be sure there were rum everythings. Pity there was not a word of truth in that superstition about bodies bleeding when touched by the hand of the right person; you never got a sign out of bodies. You got row enough out of such as her—she was good for all night now" (referring here to the banging demands for the liver), "but you got nothing out of bodies if it was ever so."

There being nothing more to be done until the Inquest was held next day, the friends went away together, and Gaffer Hexam and his son went their separate way. But, arriving at the last corner, Gaffer bade his boy go home while he turned into a red-curtained tavern, that stood dropsically bulging over the causeway, "for a half-a-pint."

The boy lifted the latch he had lifted before, and found his sister again seated before the fire at her work. Who raised her head upon his coming in and asking:
"Where did you go, Liz?"
"I went out in the dark."
"There was no necessity for that. It was all right enough."

"One of the gentlemen, the one who didn't speak while I was there, looked hard at me. And I was afraid he might know what my face meant. But there! Don't mind me, Charley! I was all in a tremble of another sort when you owned to father you could write a little."

"Ah! But I made believe I wrote so badly, as that it was odds if any one could read it. And when I wrote slowest and smeared out with my finger most, father was best pleased, as he stood looking over me."
The girl put aside her work, and drawing her seat close to his seat by the fire, laid her arm gently on his shoulder.
"You'll make the most of your time, Charley; won't you?"
"Won't I? Come! I like that. Don't I?"
"Yes, Charley, yes. You work hard at your learning, I know. And I work a little, Charley, and plan and contrive a little (wake out of my sleep contriving sometimes), how to get together a shilling now, and a shilling then, that shall make father believe you are beginning to earn a stray living along shore."
"You are father's favourite, and can make him believe anything."
"I wish I could, Charley! For if I could make him believe that learning was a good thing, and that we might lead better lives, I should be a most content to die."
"Don't talk stuff about dying, Liz."
She placed her hands in one another on his shoulder, and laying her rich brown cheek against them as she looked down at the fire, went on thoughtfully:
"Of an evening, Charley, when you are at the school, and father's——"
"At the Six Jolly Fellowship-Porters," the boy struck in, with a backward nod of his head towards the public-house.
"Yes. Then as I sit a-looking at the fire, I seem to see in the burning coal—like where that glow is now——"
"That's gas, that is," said the boy, "coming out of a bit of a forest that's been under the mud that was under the water in the days of Noah's Ark. Look here! When I take the poker——and give it a dig——"
"Don't disturb it, Charley, or it'll be all in a blaze. It's that dull glow near it, coming and going, that I mean. When I look at it of an evening, it comes like pictures to me, Charley."
"Show us a picture," said the boy. "Tell us where to look."
"Ah! It wants my eyes, Charley."
"Cut away then, and tell us what your eyes make of it."
"Why, there are you and me, Charley, when you were quite a baby that never knew a mother——"
"Don't go saying I never knew a mother," interposed the boy, "for I knew a little sister that was sister and mother both."
The girl laughed delightedly, and her eyes filled with pleasant tears, as he put both his arms round her waist and so held her.
"There are you and me, Charley, when father was away at work and locked us out, for fear we should set ourselves afire or fall out of window, sitting on the door-sill, sitting on other door-steps, sitting on the bank of the river, wandering about to get through the time. You are rather heavy to carry, Charley, and I am often obliged to rest. Sometimes we are sleepy and fall asleep together in a corner, sometimes we are very hungry, sometimes we are a little frightened, but what is oftenerest hard upon us is the cold. You remember, Charley?"
"I remember," said the boy, pressing her to him twice or thrice, "that I snuggled under a little shawl, and it was warm there."
"Sometimes it rains, and we creep under a boat or the like of that; sometimes it's dark, and we get among the gaslights, sitting watching the people as they go along the streets. At last, up comes father and takes us home. And home seems such a shelter after out of doors! And father pulls my shoes off, and dries my feet at the fire, and has me to sit by him while he smokes his pipe long after you are abed, and I notice that father's is a large hand 'but never a heavy one when it touches me, and that father's is a rough voice but never an angry one when it speaks to me. So, I grow up, and little by little father trusts me, and makes me his companion, and, let him be put out as he may, never once strikes me."

The listening boy gave a grunt here, as much as to say "But he strikes me though!"

"Those are some of the pictures of what is past, Charley."

"Cut away again," said the boy, "and give us a fortune-telling one; a future one."

"Well! There am I, continuing with father and holding to father, because father loves me and I love father. I can't so much as read a book, because, if I had learned, father would have thought I was deserting him, and I should have lost my influence. I have not the influence I want to have, I cannot stop some dreadful things I try to stop, but I go on in the hope and trust that the time will come. In the meanwhile I know that I am in some things a stay to father, and that if I was not faithful to him he would—in revenge-like, or in disappointment, or both—go wild and bad."

"Give us a touch of the fortune-telling pictures about me."

"I was passing on to them, Charley," said the girl, who had not changed her attitude since she began, and who now mournfully shook her head; "the others were all leading up. There are you——"

"Where am I, Liz?"

"Still in the hollow down by the flare."

"There seems to be the deuce-and-all in the hollow down by the flare," said the boy, glancing from her eyes to the brazier, which had a grisly skeleton look on its long thin legs.

"There are you, Charley, working your way, in secret from father, at the school; and you get prizes; and you go on better and better; and you come to be a—what was it you called it when you told me about that?"

"Ha, ha! Fortune-telling not know the name!" cried the boy, seeming to be rather relieved by this default on the part of the hollow down by the flare. "Pupil-teacher."

"You come to be a pupil-teacher, and you still go on better and better, and you rise to be a master full of learning and respect. But the secret has come to father's knowledge long before, and it has divided you from father, and from me."

"No it hasn't!"

"Yes it has, Charley. I see, as plain as plain can be, that your way is not ours, and that even if father could be got to forgive your taking it (which he never could be), that way of yours would be darkened by our way. But I see too, Charley——"

"Still as plain as plain can be, Liz?" asked the boy playfully.

"Ah! Still. That it is a great work to have cut you away from father's life, and to have made a new and good beginning. So there am I, Charley, left alone with father, keeping him as straight as I can, watching for more influence than I have, and hoping that through some fortunate chance, or when he is ill, or when—I don’t know what—I may turn him to wish to do better things.”

“You said you couldn’t read a book, Lizzie. Your library of books is the hollow down by the flare, I think.”

“I should be very glad to be able to read real books. I feel my want of learning very much, Charley. But I should feel it much more, if I didn’t know it to be a tie between me and father.—Hark! Father’s tread!”

It being now past “midnight, the bird of prey went straight to roost. At mid-day following he reappeared at the Six Jolly Fellowship-Porters, in the character, not new to him, of a witness before a Coroner’s Jury.

Mr. Mortimer Lightwood, besides sustaining the character of one of the witnesses, doubled the part with that of the eminent solicitor who watched the proceedings on behalf of the representatives of the deceased, as was duly recorded in the newspapers. Mr. Inspector watched the proceedings too, and kept his watching closely to himself. Mr. Julius Handford having given his right address, and being reported in solvent circumstances as to his bill, though nothing more was known of him at his hotel except that his way of life was very retired, had no summons to appear, and was merely present in the shades of Mr. Inspector’s mind.

The case was made interesting to the public, by Mr. Mortimer Lightwood’s evidence touching the circumstances under which the deceased, Mr. John Harmon, had returned to England; exclusive private proprietorship in which circumstances was set up at dinner-tables for several days, by Veneering, Twemlow, Podsnap, and all the Buffers; who all related them irreconcilably with one another, and contradicted themselves. It was also made interesting by the testimony of Job Potterson, the ship’s steward, and one Mr. Jacob Kibble, a fellow-passenger, that the deceased Mr. John Harmon did bring over, in a hand-valise with which he did disembark, the sum realized by the forced sale of his little landed property, and that the sum exceeded, in ready money, seven hundred pounds. It was further made interesting, by the remarkable experiences of Jesse Hexam in having rescued from the Thames so many dead bodies, and for whose behoof a rapturous admirer subscribing himself “A friend to Burial” (perhaps an undertaker), sent eighteen postage stamps, and five “Now Sir’s” to the editor of the Times.

Upon the evidence adduced before them, the Jury found, That the body of Mr. John Harmon had been discovered floating in the Thames, in an advanced state of decay, and much injured; and that the said Mr. John Harmon had come by his death under highly suspicious circumstances, though by whose act or in what precise manner there was no evidence before this Jury to show. And they appended to their verdict, a recommendation to the Home Office (which Mr. Inspector appeared to think highly sensible), to offer a reward for the solution of the mystery. Within eight-and-forty hours, a reward of One Hundred Pounds was proclaimed, together with a free pardon to any person or persons not the actual perpetrator or perpetrators, and so forth in due form.
This Proclamation rendered Mr. Inspector additionally studious, and caused him to stand meditating on river-stairs and causeways, and to go lurking about in boats, putting this and that together. But, according to the success with which you put this and that together, you get a woman and a fish apart, or a Mermaid in combination. And Mr. Inspector could turn out nothing better than a Mermaid, which no Judge and Jury would believe in.

Thus, like the tides on which it had been borne to the knowledge of men, the Harmon Murder—as it came to be popularly called—went up and down, and ebbed and flowed, now in the town, now in the country, now among palaces, now among hovels, now among lords and ladies and gentlefolks, now among labourers and hammers and ballast-heavers, until at last, after a long interval of slack water it got out to sea and drifted away.

CHAPTER IV.

THE R. WILFER FAMILY.

Reginald Wilfer is a name with rather a grand sound, suggesting on first acquaintance brasses in country churches, scrolls in stained-glass windows, and generally the De Wilfers who came over with the Conqueror. For, it is a remarkable fact in genealogy that no De Any ones ever came over with Anybody else.

But, the Reginald Wilfer family were of such commonplace extraction and pursuits that their forefathers had for generations modestly subsisted on the Docks, the Excise Office, and the Custom House, and the existing R. Wilfer was a poor clerk. So poor a clerk, though having a limited salary and an unlimited family, that he had never yet attained the modest object of his ambition: which was, to wear a complete new suit of clothes, hat and boots included, at one time. His black hat was brown before he could afford a coat, his pantaloons were white at the seams and knees before he could buy a pair of boots, his boots had worn out before he could treat himself to new pantaloons, and, by the time he worked round to the hat again, that shining modern article roofed-in an ancient ruin of various periods.

If the conventional Cherub could ever grow up and be clothed, he might be photographed as a portrait of Wilfer. His chubby, smooth, innocent appearance was a reason for his being always treated with condescension when he was not put down. A stranger entering his own poor house at about ten o'clock P.M. might have been surprised to find him sitting up to supper. So boyish was he in his curves and proportions, that his old schoolmaster meeting him in Cheapside, might have been unable to withstand the temptation of caning him on the spot. In short, he was the conventional cherub, after the supposititious shoot just mentioned, rather grey, with signs of care on his expression, and in decidedly insolvent circumstances.

He was shy, and unwilling to own to the name of Reginald, as being too aspiring and self-assertive a name. In his signature he used only the initial R., and imparted what it really stood for, to none but chosen friends, under the seal of confidence. Out of this, the facetious habit had arisen in the neighborhood surrounding Mining Lane of making christian names for him of adjectives and participles beginning with R. Some of these were more or less appropriate: as Rusty, Retiring, Ruddy, Round, Ripe, Ridiculous, Ruminative; others, derived their point from their want of application: as Raging, Rattling, Roaring, Raffish. But, his popular name was Rumty, which in a moment of inspiration had been bestowed upon him by a gentleman of convivial habits connected with the drug-market, as the beginning of a social chorus, his leading part in the execution of which had led this gentleman to the Temple of Fame, and of which the whole expressive burden ran:

"Rumty iddity, row dow dow,
Sing toodlely, teedlely, bow wow wow."

Thus he was constantly addressed, even in minor notes on business, as "Dear Rumty;" in answer to which, he sedately signed himself, "Yours truly, R. Wilfer."

He was clerk in the drug-house of Chicksey, Veneering, and Stobbles. Chicksey and Stobbles, his former masters, had both become absorbed in Veneering, once their traveller or commission agent: who had signalized his accession to supreme power by bringing into the business a quantity of plate-glass window and French-polished mahogany partition, and a gleaming and enormous door-plate.

R. Wilfer locked up his desk one evening, and, putting his bunch of keys in his pocket much as if it were his peg-top, made for home. His home was in the Holloway region north of London, and then divided from it by fields and trees. Between Battle Bridge and that part of the Holloway district in which he dwelt, was a tract of suburban Sahara, where tiles and bricks were burnt, bones were boiled, carpets were beat, rubbish was shot, dogs were fought, and dust was heaped by contractors. Skirting the border of this desert, by the way he took, when the light of its kiln-fires made lurid smears on the fog, R. Wilfer sighed and shook his head.

"Ah me!" said he, "what might have been is not what is!"

With which commentary on human life, indicating an experience of it not exclusively his own, he made the best of his way to the end of his journey.

Mrs. Wilfer was, of course, a tall woman and an angular. Her lord being cherubic, she was necessarily majestic, according to the principle which matrimonially unites contrasts. She was much given to tying up her head in a pocket-handkerchief, knotted under the chin. This head-gear, in conjunction with a pair of gloves worn within doors, she seemed to consider as at once a kind of armour against misfortune (invariably assuming it when in low spirits or difficulties), and as a species of full dress. It was therefore with some sinking of the spirit that her husband beheld her thus heroically attired, putting down her candle in the little hall, and coming down the doorsteps through the little front court to open the gate for him.
Something had gone wrong with the house-door, for R. Wilfer stopped on the steps, staring at it, and cried:

"Halloa!"

"Yes," said Mrs. Wilfer, "the man came himself with a pair of pincers, and took it off, and took it away. He said that as he had no expectation of ever being paid for it, and as he had an order for another LADIES' SCHOOL door-plate, it was better (burnished up) for the interests of all parties."

"Perhaps it was, my dear; what do you think?"

"You are master here, R. W.," returned his wife. "It is as you think; not as I do. Perhaps it might have been better if the man had taken the door too?"

"My dear, we couldn't have done without the door."

"Couldn't we?"

"Why, my dear! Could we?"

"It is as you think, R. W.; not as I do." With those submissive words, the dutiful wife preceded him down a few stairs to a little basement front room, half kitchen, half parlour, where a girl of about nineteen, with an exceedingly pretty figure and face, but with an impatient and petulant expression both in her face and in her shoulders (which in her sex and at her age are very expressive of discontent), sat playing draughts with a younger girl, who was the youngest of the House of Wilfer. Not to encumber this page by telling off the Wilfers in detail and casting them up in the gross, it is enough for the present that the rest were what is called "out in the world," in various ways, and that they were Many. So many, that when one of his dutiful children called in to see him, R. Wilfer generally seemed to say to himself, after a little mental arithmetic, "Oh! here's another of 'em!" before adding aloud, "How do, John," or Susan, as the case might be.

"Well Piggywiggies," said R. W., "how do do to-night? What I was thinking of, my dear," to Mrs. Wilfer already seated in a corner with folded gloves, "was that as we have let our first floor so well, and as we have now no place in which you could teach pupils, even if pupils——"

"The milkman said he knew of two young ladies of the highest respectability who were in search of a suitable establishment, and he took a card," interposed Mrs. Wilfer, with severe monotonity, as if she were reading an Act of Parliament aloud. "Tell your father whether it was last Monday, Bella."

"But we never heard any more of it, ma," said Bella, the elder girl.

"In addition to which, my dear," her husband urged, "if you have no place to put two young persons into——"

"Pardon me," Mrs. Wilfer again interposed; "they were not young persons. Two young ladies of the highest respectability. Tell your father, Bella, whether the milkman said so."

"My dear, it is the same thing."

"No it is not," said Mrs. Wilfer, with the same impressive monotonity. "Pardon me!"

"I mean, my dear, it is the same thing as to space. As to space. If you have no space in which to put two youthful fellow-creatures, however eminently respectable, which I do not doubt, where are those youthful fellow-creatures to be accommodated? I carry it no further than that. And solely looking at it," said her husband, making the stipulation at once in a conciliatory, complimentary, and argumentative tone—"as I am sure you will agree, my love—from a fellow-creature point of view, my dear."

"I have nothing more to say," returned Mrs. Wilfer, with a meek renunciatory action of her gloves. "It is as you think, R. W.; not as I do."

Here, the huffing of Miss Bella and the loss of three of her men at a sweep, aggravated by the coronation of an opponent, led to that young lady's jerking the draught-board and pieces off the table: which her sister went down on her knees to pick up.

"Poor Bella!" said Mrs. Wilfer.

"And poor Lavinia, perhaps, my dear?" suggested R. W.

"Pardon me," said Mrs. Wilfer, "no!"

It was one of the worthy woman's specialities that she had an amazing power of gratifying her splenetic or worldly-minded humours by extolling her own family: which she thus proceeded, in the present case, to do.

"No, R. W. Lavinia has not known the trial that Bella has known. The trial that your daughter Bella has undergone, is, perhaps, without a parallel, and has been borne, I will say, Nobly. When you see your daughter Bella in her black dress, which she alone of all the family wears, and when you remember the circumstances which have led to her wearing it, and when you know how those circumstances have been sustained, then, R. W., lay your head upon your pillow and say, 'Poor Lavinia!'"

Here, Miss Lavinia, from her kneeling situation under the table, put in that she didn't want to be "poored by pa," or anybody else.

"I am sure you do not, my dear," returned her mother, "for you have a fine brave spirit. And your sister Cecilia has a fine brave spirit of another kind, a spirit of pure devotion, a beau-ti-ful spirit! The self-sacrifice of Cecilia reveals a pure and womanly character, very seldom equalled, never surpassed. I have now in my pocket a letter from your sister Cecilia, received this morning—received three months after her marriage, poor child!—in which she tells me that her husband must unexpectedly shelter under their roof his reduced aunt. 'But I will be true to him, mamma,' she touchingly writes, 'I will not leave him, I must not forget that he is my husband. Let his aunt come!' If this is not pathetic, if this is not woman's devotion——I!' The good lady waved her gloves in a sense of the impossibility of saying more, and tied the pocket-handkerchief over her head in a tighter knot under her chin.

Bella, who was now seated on the rug to warm herself, with her brown eyes on the fire and a handful of her brown curls in her mouth, laughed at this, and then pouted and half cried.

"I am sure," said she, "though you have no feeling for me, pa, I am one of the most unfortunate girls that ever lived. You know how poor we are" (it is probable he did, having some reason to know it!), "and what a glimpse of wealth I had, and how it melted away, and how I am here in this ridiculous mourning—which I hate!—" kind of a widow who never was married. And yet you don't feel for me.—Yes you do, yes you do."

This abrupt change was occasioned by her father's face. She stopped to pull him down from his chair in an attitude highly favourable to strangulation, and to give him a kiss and a pat or two on the cheek.

"But you ought to feel for me, you know, pa."

"My dear, I do."

"Yes, and I say you ought to. If they had only left me alone and told me nothing about it, it would have mattered much less. But that nasty Mr. Lightwood feels it his duty, as he says, to write and tell me what is in reserve for me, and then I am obliged to get rid of George Sampson."

Here, Lavinia, rising to the surface with the last draughtman rescued, interposed, "You never cared for George Sampson, Bella."

"And did I say I did, miss?" Then, pouting again, with the curls in her mouth; "George Sampson was very fond of me, and admired me very much, and put up with everything I did to him."

"You were rude enough to him," Lavinia again interposed.

"And did I say I wasn't, miss? I am not setting up to be sentimental about George Sampson. I only say George Sampson was better than nothing."

"You didn't show him that you thought even that," Lavinia again interposed.

"You are a chit and a little idiot," returned Bella, "or you wouldn't make such a dolly speech. What did you expect me to do? Wait till you are a woman, and don't talk about what you don't understand. You only show your ignorance!" Then, whimpering again, and at intervals biting the curls, and stopping to look how much was bitten off, "It's a shame! There never was such a hard case! I shouldn't care so much if it wasn't so ridiculous. It was ridiculous enough to have a stranger coming over to marry me, whether he liked it or not. It was ridiculous enough to know what an embarrassing meeting it would be, and how we never could pretend to have an inclination of our own, either of us. It was ridiculous enough to know I shouldn't like him—how could I like him, left to him in a will, like a dozen of spoons, with everything cut and dried beforehand, like orange chips. Talk of orange flowers indeed! I declare again it's a shame! Those ridiculous points would have been smoothed away by the money, for I love money, and want money—want it dreadfully. I hate to be poor, and we are degradingly poor, offensively poor, miserably poor, beastly poor. But here I am, left with all the ridiculous parts of the situation remaining, and, added to them all, this ridiculous dress! And if the truth was known, when the Harmon murder was all over the town, and people were speculating on it's being suicide, I dare say those impudent wretches at the clubs and places made jokes about the miserable creature's having preferred a watery grave to me. It's likely enough they took such liberties; I shouldn't wonder! I declare it's a very hard case indeed, and I am a most unfortunate girl. The idea of being a kind of a widow, and never having been married! And the idea of being as poor as ever after all, and going into black, besides, for a man I never saw, and should have hated—as far as he was concerned—if I had seen!"

The young lady's lamentations were checked at this point by a knuckle, knocking at the half-open door of the room. The knuckle had knocked two or three times already, but had not been heard.

"Who is it?" said Mrs. Wilfer, in her Act-of-Parliament manner.

"Enter!"

A gentleman coming in, Miss Bella, with a short and sharp exclamation, scrambled off the hearth-rug and massed the bitten curls together in their right place on her neck.

"The servant girl had her key in the door as I came up, and directed me to this room, telling me I was expected. I am afraid I should have asked her to announce me."

"Pardon me," returned Mrs. Wilfer. "Not at all. Two of my daughters. R. W., this is the gentleman who has taken your first-floor. He was so good as to make an appointment for to-night, when you would be at home."

A dark gentleman. Thirty at the utmost. An expressive, one might say handsome, face. A very bad manner. In the last degree constrained, reserved, diffident, troubled. His eyes were on Miss Bella for an instant, and then looked at the ground as he addressed the master of the house.

"Seeing that I am quite satisfied, Mr. Wilfer, with the rooms, and with their situation, and with their price, I suppose a memorandum between us of two or three lines, and a payment down, will bind the bargain? I wish to send in furniture without delay."

Two or three times during this short address, the cherub addressed had made chubby motions towards a chair. The gentleman now took it, laying a hesitating hand on a corner of the table, and with another hesitating hand lifting the crown of his hat to his lips, and drawing it before his mouth.

"The gentleman, R. W.," said Mrs. Wilfer, "proposes to take your apartments by the quarter. A quarter's notice on either side."

"Shall I mention, sir," insinuated the landlord, expecting it to be received as a matter of course, "the form of a reference?"

"I think," returned the gentleman, after a pause, "that a reference is not necessary; neither, to say the truth, is it convenient, for I am a stranger in London. I require no reference from you, and perhaps, therefore, you will require none from me. That will be fair on both sides. Indeed, I show the greater confidence of the two, for I will pay in advance whatever you please, and I am going to trust my furniture here. Whereas, if you were in embarrassed circumstances—this is merely supposititious—"

Conscience causing R. Wilfer to colour, Mrs. Wilfer, from a corner (she always got into stately corners) came to the rescue with a deep-toned "Per-fectly."

"—Why then I—might lose it."

"Well!" observed R. Wilfer, cheerfully, "money and goods are certainly the best of references."

"Do you think they are the best, pa?" asked Miss Bella, in a low voice, and without looking over her shoulder as she warmed her foot on the fender.
"Among the best, my dear."

"I should have thought, myself; it was so easy to add the usual kind of one," said Bella, with a toss of her curls.

The gentleman listened to her, with a face of marked attention, though he neither looked up nor changed his attitude. He sat, still and silent, until his future landlord accepted his proposals, and brought writing materials to complete the business. He sat, still and silent, while the landlord wrote.

When the agreement was ready in duplicate (the landlord having worked at it like some cherubic scribe, in what is conventionally called a doubtful, which means a not at all doubtful, Old Master), it was signed by the contracting parties, Bella looking on as scornful witness. The contracting parties were R. Wilfer, and John Rokesmith Esquire.

When it came to Bella's turn to sign her name, Mr. Rokesmith, who was standing, as he had sat, with a hesitating hand upon the table, looked at her stealthily, but narrowly. He looked at the pretty figure bending down over the paper and saying, "Where am I to go, pa? Here, in this corner?" He looked at the beautiful brown hair, shading the coquettish face; he looked at the free dash of the signature, which was a bold one for a woman's; and then they looked at one another.

"Much obliged to you, Miss Wilfer."

"Obliged?"

"I have given you so much trouble."

"Signing my name? Yes, certainly. But I am your landlord's daughter, sir."

As there was nothing more to do but pay eight sovereigns in earnest of the bargain, pocket the agreement, appoint a time for the arrival of his furniture and himself, and go, Mr. Rokesmith did that as awkwardly as it might be done, and was escorted by his landlord to the outer air. When R. Wilfer returned, candlestick in hand, to the bosom of his family, he found the bosom agitated.

"Pa," said Bella, "we have got a Murderer for a tenant."

"Pa," said Lavinia, "we have got a Robber."

"To see him unable for his life to look anybody in the face!" said Bella. "There never was such an exhibition."

"My dears," said their father, "he is a diffident gentleman, and I should say particularly so in the society of girls of your age."

"Nonsense, our age!" cried Bella, impatiently. "What's that got to do with him?"

"Besides, we are not of the same age:—which age?" demanded Lavinia.

"Never you mind, Lavvy," retorted Bella; "you wait till you are of an age to ask such questions. Pa, mark my words! Between Mr. Rokesmith and me, there is a natural antipathy and a deep distrust; and something will come of it!"

"My dear, and girls," said the cherub-patriarch, "between Mr. Rokesmith and me, there is a matter of eight sovereigns, and something for supper shall come of it, if you'll agree upon the article."

This was a neat and happy turn to give the subject, treats being rare in the Wilfer household, where a monotonous appearance of Dutch-cheese at ten o'clock in the evening had been rather frequently commented on by the dimpled shoulders of Miss Bella. Indeed, the modest Dutchman himself seemed conscious of his want of variety, and generally came before the family in a state of apologetic perspiration. After some discussion on the relative merits of veal-cutlet, sweet-bread, and lobster, a decision was pronounced in favour of veal-cutlet. Mrs. Wilfer then solemnly divested herself of her handkerchief and gloves, as a preliminary sacrifice to preparing the frying-pan, and R. W. himself went out to purchase the viand. He soon returned, bearing the same in a fresh cabbage-leaf, where it coyly embraced a rasher of ham. Melodious sounds were not long in rising from the frying-pan on the fire, or in seeming, as the firelight danced in the mellow halls of a couple of full bottles on the table, to play appropriate dance-music.

The cloth was laid by Lavvy. Bella, as the acknowledged ornament of the family, employed both her hands in giving her hair an additional wave while sitting in the easiest chair, and occasionally threw in a direction touching the supper: as, “Very brown, ma;” or, to her sister, “Put the saltcellar straight, miss, and don’t be a dowdy little puss.”

Meantime her father, chinking Mr. Rokesmith’s gold as he sat expectant between his knife and fork, remarked that six of those sovereigns came just in time for their landlord, and stood them in a little pile on the white tablecloth to look at.

“I hate our landlord!” said Bella.

But, observing a fall in her father’s face, she went and sat down by him at the table, and began touching up his hair with the handle of a fork. It was one of the girl’s spoilt ways to be always arranging the family’s hair—perhaps because her own was so pretty, and occupied so much of her attention.

“You deserve to have a house of your own; don’t you, poor pa?”

“I don’t deserve it better than another, my dear.”

“At any rate I, for one, want it more than another,” said Bella, holding him by the chin, as she stuck his flaxen hair on end, “and I grudge this money going to the Monster that swallows up so much, when we all want—Everything. And if you say (as you want to say; I know you want to say so, pa) ‘that’s neither reasonable nor honest. Bella,’ then I answer, ‘Maybe not, pa—very likely—but it’s one of the consequences of being poor, and of thoroughly hating and detesting to be poor, and that’s my case.’ Now, you look lovely, pa; why don’t you always wear your hair like that? And here’s the cutlet! If it isn’t very brown, ma, I can’t eat it, and must have a bit put back to be done expressly.”

However, as it was brown, even to Bella’s taste, the young lady graciously partook of it without reconsignment to the frying-pan, and also, in due course, of the contents of the two bottles: whereof one held Scotch ale and the other rum. The latter perfume, with the fostering aid of boiling water and lemon-peel, diffused itself throughout the room, and became so highly concentrated around the warm fireside, that the wind passing over the house roof must have rushed off charged with a delicious whiff of it, after buzzing like a great bee at that particular chimney-pot.

“Pa,” said Bella, sipping the fragrant mixture and warming her favourite ankle; "when old Mr. Harmon made such a fool of me (not to mention himself, as he is dead), what do you suppose he did it for?"

"Impossible to say, my dear. As I have told you times out of number since his will was brought to light, I doubt if I ever exchanged a hundred words with the old gentleman. If it was his whim to surprise us, his whim succeeded. For he certainly did it."

"And I was stamping my foot and screaming, when he first took notice of me; was I?" said Bella, contemplating the ankle before mentioned.

"You were stamping your little foot, my dear, and screaming with your little voice, and laying into me with your little bonnet, which you had snatched off for the purpose," returned her father, as if the remembrance gave a relish to the rum; "you were doing this one Sunday morning when I took you out, because I didn't go the exact way you wanted, when the old gentleman, sitting on a seat near, said, 'That's a nice girl; that's a very nice girl; a promising girl!' And so you were, my dear."

"And then he asked my name, did he, pa?"

"Then he asked your name, my dear, and mine; and on other Sunday mornings, when we walked his way, we saw him again, and—and really that's all."

As that was all the rum and water too, or, in other words, as R. W. delicately signified that his glass was empty, by throwing back his head and standing the glass upside down on his nose and upper lip, it might have been charitable in Mrs. Wilfer to suggest replenishment. But that heroine briefly suggesting "Bedtime" instead, the bottles were put away, and the family retired; she cherubically escorted, like some severe saint in a painting, or merely human matron allegorically treated.

"And by this time to-morrow," said Lavinia when the two girls were alone in their room, "we shall have Mr. Rokesmith here, and shall be expecting to have our throats cut."

"You needn't stand between me and the candle for all that," retorted Bella. "This is another of the consequences of being poor! The idea of a girl with a really fine head of hair, having to do it by one flat candle and a few inches of looking-glass!"

"You caught George Sampson with it, Bella, bad as your means of dressing it are."

"You low little thing. Caught George Sampson with it! Don't talk about catching people, miss, till your own time for catching—as you call it—comes."

"Perhaps it has come," muttered Lavv, with a toss of her head.

"What did you say?" asked Bella, very sharply. "What did you say, miss?"

Lavvy declining equally to repeat or to explain, Bella gradually lapsed over her hair-dressing into a soliloquy on the miseries of being poor, as exemplified in having nothing to put on, nothing to go out in, nothing to dress by, only a nasty box to dress at instead of a commodious dressing-table; and being obliged to take in suspicious lodgers. On the last grievance as her climax, she laid great stress—and might have laid greater, had she known that if Mr. Julius Handford had a twin brother upon earth, Mr. John Rokesmith was the man.
Dr. de Jongh's

Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil

Prescribed by the most eminent Medical Men as the safest, speediest, and most effectual remedy for CONSUMPTION, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, COUGHS, GENERAL DEBILITY, RHEUMATISM, GOUT, DISEASES OF THE SKIN, RICKETS, INFANTILE WASTING AND ALL SCROFULOUS AFFECTIONS.

The invariable purity, palatableness, speedy efficacy, and consequent economy of this unrivalled preparation, have obtained for it the general approval and unqualified confidence of the Medical Profession, and, notwithstanding the active and unscrupulous opposition of interested dealers, an unprecedented amount of public patronage.

The immeasurable therapeutic superiority of Dr. de Jongh’s Cod Liver Oil over every other variety is incontestably established by the recorded opinions of the most distinguished Physicians and Surgeons in all parts of the world. In numberless instances, where other kinds of Cod Liver Oil had been long and copiously administered with little or no benefit, Dr. de Jongh’s Oil has produced almost immediate relief, arrested disease, and restored health.

ITS EFFICACY IN GENERAL DEBILITY.

In cases of prostration and emaciation produced by long sickness, by exposure to the deleterious influences of tropical and unhealthy climates, vicissitudes of temperature, or where extreme heat or cold, excessive labour, fatigue, bad nourishment, and other hardships have caused depressing lassitude and reduced the vital forces, and where life appeared to be even at its lowest ebb, the restorative powers of Dr. de Jongh’s Oil have been remarkably manifested. By its administration, the natural appetite is revived, and the functions of digestion and assimilation are improved, reanimated, and regulated; and, when its use has been steadily persevered in, its peculiar tonic and nutritive properties have entirely restored health and strength to the most feeble and deteriorated constitutions.

The actual benefit derived is thus described by B. Clarke, Esq., M.R.C.S., F.L.S., author of “Notes and Suggestions on Cod Liver Oil and its Uses”:

“Having myself taken both the Pale and Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil for debility, I am able, from my own experience, to remark upon their effects and comparative usefulness as remedial agents. After the Pale Oil, and all other remedies that I could think of had failed, I tried, merely as a last resort, Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Oil. I received immediate relief; and its use was the means of my restoration to health. In their sensible properties and chemical constituents the Pale Oil and Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Oil are distinct medicines; and, from my observation of their mode of action and effects, I must believe that I have seen many patients die both in hospital and private practice, some of them of juvenile years, and others in the prime of life, who in all probability would have been cured if the medical properties of Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Oil had been known as they are now, and its use prescribed.”

[For further Select Medical Opinions see other side.]
CONSUMPTION & DISEASES OF THE CHEST.

The extraordinary virtues of Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil in Pulmonary Consumption may now be considered as fully established. No remedy so rapidly restores the exhausted strength, improves the nutritive functions, stops or diminishes emaciation, checks the perspiration, quiets the cough and expectoration, or produces a more marked and favourable influence on the local malady.

Dr. Wadding, late Physician to the Hereford Infirmary, bears the following high testimony to its efficacy from his own personal experience:

“I can take Dr. de Jongh’s Oil without difficulty or dislike, and with as little inconvenience as water alone. Not only in my own case, but in many others I have seen, it has caused an improvement of chest symptoms, and an increase of weight, so soon and so lasting, as to be quite remarkable. I believe Dr. de Jongh’s Oil to be the most valuable remedy we possess for chronic and constitutional disease.”

Dr. Hitchman, of Liverpool, Author of “A Manual of Phthisis,” observes:

“Having extensively prescribed Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil for a long series of years in cases of Consumption, I deem it but an act of justice to record my emphatic testimony in favour of its superior merits as a preventive of Emaciation, and generally as an excellent restorative in Debility and Diseases of the Chest.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

From innumerable medical and scientific opinions of the highest character in commendation of Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, the following are selected:

Sir Henry Marsh, Bart., M.D., Physician in Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland.

“I consider Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil to be a very pure oil, not likely to create disgust, and a therapeutic agent of great value.”

Dr. Letheby,
Medical Officer of Health, and Chief Analyst to the City of London.

“The Oil corresponds in all its characters with that named ‘Huile Brune,’ and described as the best variety in the masterly treatise of Dr. de Jongh. It is, I believe, universally acknowledged that Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil has great therapeutic power; and from my investigations, I have no doubt of its being a pure and unadulterated article.”

Dr. Lawrance,
Physician to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex-Colyer & Gothia.

“I invariably prescribe Dr. de Jongh’s Cod Liver Oil in preference to any other, feeling assured that I am recommending a genuine article, and not a manufactured compound in which the efficacy of this invaluable medicine is destroyed.”

Dr. Earlow,
Senior Physician to Guy’s Hospital.

“I have frequently recommended persons consulting me to make use of Dr. de Jongh’s Cod Liver Oil. I have been well satisfied with its effects, and believe it to be a very pure oil, well fitted for those cases in which the use of that substance is indicated.”

Sir Joseph Olliffe, M.D., Physician to the British Embassy at Paris.

“I have frequently prescribed Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, and I have every reason to be satisfied with its beneficial and salutary effects.”

Dr. Lankester, F.R.S., Coroner for Central Middlesex.

“I consider that the purity of this Oil is secured in its preparation by the personal attention of so good a Chemist and Intelligent a Physician as Dr. de Jongh, who has also written the best Medical Treatise on the Oil with which I am acquainted. Hence, I deem the Cod Liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medicinal efficacy.”

Dr. Granville, F.R.S.,
Author of the “Spas of Germany.”

“Dr. Granville has found that Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil produces the desired effect in a shorter time than other kinds, and that it does not cause the nausea and indigestion too often consequent on the administration of the pale oil.”

Edwin Canton, Esq., F.R.G.S.,
President of the Medical Society of London.

“For several years past I have been in the habit of prescribing Dr. de Jongh’s Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, and find it to be much more efficacious than other varieties of the same medicine which I have also employed with a view to test their relative superiority.”

DR. DE Jongh’s LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL is sold only in IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 3s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; Capsuled, and labelled with his Stamp and Signature, WITHOUT WHICH NONE CAN POSSIBLY BE GENUINE, By all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

THE TEMPLE ANECDOTES.

BY RALPH & CHANDOS TEMPLE.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY EMINENT ARTISTS, ENGRAVED
BY THE BROTHERS DALZIEL.

"Keep unshak'd
That temple, thy fair mind."

Shakspeare.

MANKIND, it has been observed, love anecdotes. The conversation, whether of lettered men or of men of the world, is made up of them: the books which most delight are the books which abound in them. In long narratives of History and Biography, the portions best remembered are always those which illustrate some point of character; develop in action some new truth; or record some discovery or invention in a brief passage. These are strictly anecdotes, and thus, by a sort of winnowing process, the minds and memories of readers, where the labour is not already performed for them, may be said to reduce all narratives to anecdotal form.

Forty years ago the Percy Anecdotes delighted our fathers, forming one of the earliest and most successful attempts to supply good popular literature, at a price which till then had been rarely associated with any but publications of an exceptional character.

Readers have not only multiplied enormously since 1820, but every reader is now critical to an extent which the writers of that day little foresaw. Forty years indeed yield but a faint idea of the world’s progress since that time. Another England has been added to our numbers, and the moral and material prosperity of all is considerably higher. But it is perhaps only by taking a few of the more striking points of comparison, that an adequate idea of this progress can be attained.

We require to be reminded that in 1820 the streets, even of the Metropolis, were unlighted with gas, and practically unguarded by night; that our gigantic Railway System, in which more than a thousand million sterling have been sunk, had not then turned its first sod, or built its earliest arch; that Photography was unknown, and Electric Telegraphs unimagined; that only Fifty Millions of letters then passed in one year through our Post-office, which now conveys at least Five Hundred Millions in the same space of time; and that no Daily Paper was then published at a lower price than Eightpence, while even an Almanack of any kind could not be purchased for less than a shilling, and innumerable appliances and arts, less striking to the imagination than some we have mentioned, though now no less important in their effects upon human welfare, were still unknown.

The Temple Anecdotes will be a shrine in which Happy Thoughts, Good Words, and Noble Deeds shall have a place. The aim of its Editors will be not only to be worthy of these later and better times, but also in some measure to reflect them. Though not always Biographical, The Temple Anecdotes will generally connect themselves with one of the names to which we are indebted for this progress and improvement. Although we shall not always confine ourselves to the last forty years, or even to the present century, our view will generally be to illustrate later times in all their aspects of Literature, Art, and Science, and we shall therefore rarely carry our readers a hundred years back.

Seeking always to entertain and instruct, we shall publish, at regular periods, a volume which, opened at any page, will have something to attract, whilst it leaves in the mind of the reader one or more of those current coins of knowledge without which no one can conveniently mingle in the world. Taken as a whole,

THE TEMPLE ANECDOTES,
Ranging over nearly every department of Human Knowledge, will, we hope, form a sort of panoramic view of the History of English Civilization, in its latest and hitherto most important period.

PLAN OF PUBLICATION.

The work will be printed in a convenient size, and published in Monthly Numbers, price Sixpence, in a new and beautiful type, on fine paper, and Illustrated in the best manner. Every Seven Numbers will form a handsome Volume, embellished with Fourteen full-page Plates by the Brothers Dalziel.

ENGLAND'S WORKSHOPS.

“A work of great merit, and one which cannot be too highly commended.”—Observer.

“No fairy pantomime contains more marvellous transformations than those which are related in the magic records of this book.”

“The idea of this book is good, and has, so far as we have been able to observe, been very well carried out.”—Reader.

“A very valuable and interesting account of the processes by which some of our commonest articles of utility are produced, and the wealth, science, and power employed in their production.”—Notes and Queries.

“Whoever cares to learn something of the condition and achievements of our multiform industry, will ever regret accompanying the six authors of this work in their manufacturing pilgrimage.”—London Review.

“The number of establishments visited and described is forty-one; and the information, which is very pleasantly given, takes a very wide range. It might be made a very useful book for class reading in schools, as it goes deep enough into a host of technical and scientific questions to lay a good foundation, and is written in a lively entertaining style.”—Intellectual Observer.

VALUABLE AID TO COMPOSITION.

Small post 8vo, price 3s. 6d., cloth,

THE DESK-BOOK OF ENGLISH SYNONYMES.

Designed to afford assistance in Composition, and also as a work of Reference, requisite for the Secretary and useful to the Student.

By John Sherer.

“From the very careful and complete manner in which the author has got up his Analytical Index, we should think the volume would readily serve every purpose intended.”—Reader.

“The object is well carried out.”—Notes and Queries.

“Abounds in the illustrations of terms, and their many curious affinities.”—Messenger.

“The volume is a work of reference, and is designed to form a useful and necessary addition to the library of every school—every school.”—Public Opinion.

THE OLD BUSHMAN IN LAPLAND.

Post 8vo, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.,

A SPRING AND SUMMER IN LAPLAND.

WITH NOTES ON THE FAUNA AND LANDSCAPE OF LULEÅ LAMARK.

By An Old Bushman.

“Independently of the valuable zoological information, and the useful hints to sportsmen which are to be found in its pages, the book abounds with illustrative anecdotes, incidents of northern travel, the Author’s account of his being lost in the snow, and many other details of his experiences, render the Old Bushman’s work thoroughly worth reading.”—Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF “THE HEIR OF REDCLYFFE,” Etc.

The Wars of Wapsburgh.

By the Author of “The Heir of Redclyffe,” Etc., Etc.

“Quite worthy of the author of ‘The Heir of Redclyffe.’”—Notes and Queries.

“A charmingly fanciful story. Every one who hates wasps ought to read this book and he converted. An atmosphere of kindly human interest is thrown over the whole tale, which is lighted up by the play of a beautiful fancy.”—Reader.

“This very nicely printed book we can recommend most heartily. The allegory is well carried out.”—Standard.

MICROSCOPE TEACHINGS.
Descriptions of various Objects of especial Interest and Beauty adapted for Microscopic Observation. Illustrated by the Author’s Original Drawings. With Directions for the Arrangement of a Microscope, and the Collection and Mounting of Objects.

By the HON. MRS. WARD, Author of “Telescope Teachings.”

“The Telescope and the Microscope unfold the same truths, and in all alike ‘while we explore and study, we feel a new sense of the unfailing power and infinite wisdom of the Great Creator, whose mercies are over all his works.’—So says Mrs. Ward in the preface to her charming volume, Microscope Teachings, and few books could better enforce the lesson. It is the best of several popular guides to the use of the Microscope.”—Examiner.

“Nothing could be better than the way in which the drawing and colouring are done in the sixteen large coloured plates, each of them containing an average half-a-dozen beautiful objects, and the text is worthy of the plates.”—Standard.

“Among the numerous popular works on the subject, few have appeared more worthy of favour than the present.”—Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science.

“The work is altogether a most charming and appropriate introduction to the study of the Microscope.”—Athenaeum.

MARVELS OF POND-LIFE:
OR, A YEAR’S MICROSCOPIC RECREATIONS AMONG THE POLYPS, INFUSORIA, ROTIFERS, WATER BEARS, AND POLYZOA.

By HENRY J. SLACK, F.G.S.,
Member of the Microscopical Society of London.

“Messrs. Groombridge have already issued many popular and excellent treatises on some most interesting points of science. Mr. Slack’s ‘Marvels of Pond Life’ will take a worthy place in the series.”—London Review.

“We recommend Mr. Slack’s volume, and express our welcome at the heartiness with which he enters into microscopical work, and the interest he has succeeded in throwing into his researches.”— Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science.

“Mr. Slack’s plan is, after a preliminary chapter on the use of the Microscope, to give a chapter to each month in the year. The idea is a good one. The illustrations are good, and the instructions such as beginners require.”—Saturday Review.

“All such books as Mr. Slack’s are now among our most cherished productions. The illustrations are very clear and well done. Excellent and intelligible directions are given throughout for the examination and preservation of specimens, and altogether ‘Marvels of Pond-Life’ is as complete a handbook of the subject as we should wish to see.”—Spectator.

HARBRILD, PRINTER, LONDON.
A SHAKESPEARE MEMORIAL.

Subscribed, Eighteenpence—S. O. Beeton, Treasurer.

The plan of this humble Memorial of William Shakespeare is simple. Briefly described, the intentions of the Publisher and those who have aided him are:

Firstly.—To tell something of Shakespeare’s Life and Times, to gather what could be gleaned concerning his parents, his birth, the members of his family, his wife and her kinsfolk, his friends, associates, patrons, and contemporaries; and to weave what information could be obtained by careful search into a plain narrative. To assist the writer’s task, the artist’s aid has been employed, and autographs and views and portraits have been engraved, so that our dramatis personæ should be attended by those whom he knew in the flesh, and surrounded by the scenes and places with which he was, in life, familiar.

Secondly.—The aim of this Memorial is to describe how, from first to last, Shakespeare’s Works have been given to the world, and to deliver an account of all the important editions of his Plays and Poems, setting forth the characteristics of various issues which, from their worth or reputation, are deserving of notice.

Thirdly.—It is part of the plan to present a series of Studies of Shakespeare’s characters, in a set of Engravings on Wood, and to combine with the works of the artists, a commentary, descriptive and critical, of the Plays from which the subjects have been drawn with particular reference to the personages represented.

THE SHAKESPEARE MEMORIAL COMPRIS.

Forty-eight large broadside pages, which, inclosed in a handsome wrapper, contain, besides the text, exact copies of seals, marks, arms, and many autographs, and fac-similes of letters, deeds, entries in registry, and other objects of interest, and the following.

FULL PAGE ENGRAVINGS

An Elizabethan Wrapper and Title Page designed by W. Harry Roger, displaying the Arms and Autograph of Shakespeare, and the Arms of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria, with Drawings by S. Wallis, comprising a careful copy of the Bust of Shakespeare from the Monument at Stratford-upon-Avon, of the Droeshout Etching, of the Chandos Portrait, as also of the pictures of the Post known as the Jansen, the Felton, the Stratford, and of the statue by Roebulice, and the Statuette by Bell.

Exterior of the Playhouse, in Henley-street, Stratford, from a drawing made on the spot in February, 1864.

Stratford-on-Avon, displaying the topography and architecture of the town, so that a distinct idea may be gained of the position and appearance of each street, and of each house of note, as well as of the Church of the Holy Trinity, of the Grammar School, of the Chapel of the Guild, of the Bridge, and the roads leading to Shottery and places of interest in the vicinity.

Warwick, Kenilworth, and Evesham. These three places intimately connected with England’s history, and with the Poet’s life, are here shown, with a plan of their situation as regards Stratford.

The Church of the Holy Trinity at Stratford (Exterior). From a sketch made on the spot in February, 1864, a beautiful engraving has been done of the noble edifice, the last resting-place of Shakespeare.

The Church of the Holy Trinity at Stratford (Interior). This view is so sketched as to show the precise position of Shakespeare’s Monument, and the graves of his family, whilst the grand and impressive beauty of the church is generally preserved.

Portraits of Shakespeare’s Sovereigns, Contemporaries, Biographers, Editors, Commentators, Players, Illustrators, &c. Authentic Like-nesses of Elizabeth and James I: Ben Jonson and Massinger; Rowe, Theobald, Halliwell, and Naumont; Betterton, Garrick, and Keen; Gilbert, MacI Jesse, Meadows; in all, Ninety Portraits of French, men and Germans, as well as Englishmen, who have been connected with Shakespeare’s Life and Works, have been gathered together and engraved with every care to preserve the features of the originals.

Will Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. By J. D. Watson.

“Which two I behold like a Spanish great gallon and an Englishman of war. Master Jonson, like the former, was built far higher in learning, solid, but slow in his performances. Shakespeare, with the English man of war, lesser in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his wit and invention.”—Fialier.

Shakespeare’s Characters.

The poet’s pen
Turns them to shape, and gives to airy nothing
A local habitation and a name.”

Midsummer Night’s Dream.

With ornamental borders designed by W. H. Rogers.

Also Engravings of many Exteriors and Interiors. The room in which Shakespeare was born—The old Market-Cross of Stratford.—The Grammar School of Stratford—Anne Hathaway’s Cottage at Shottery.—Kitchen in Shakespeare’s Birth-place—Room in the Birth-place showing Stairs leading to Room where Shakespeare was born—Bedroom and ancient Bedstead in Anne Hathaway’s Cottage—Kitchen in Anne Hathaway’s Cottage—Wood-case and Bed-sheet embroidered with Initials and Needlework—Scrapes on the Window in Shakespeare’s Birth-place, showing precise copies of the signatures of Sir Walter Scott and others.—Markings on the walls and ceilings of the Birth-place, showing precise copies of the signatures of W. M. Thackeray and others.—Theatres of London in Shakespeare’s time—Taverns of London in Shakespeare’s time—Garrick Jubilee Temple, &c. &c.

Each copy of the Memorial has a Frontispiece mounted, done in Chromo-Lithography by Vincent Brooks, after a Water-Colour Sketch by John Gilbert, Illustrative of one of the Songs of Sonnets of Shakespeare.

Walter K. Kelly.

Curiosities of Indo-European Tradition and Folk Lore. By Walter K. Kelly.

Post 8vo, 8s. 6d.

"This is a singularly interesting work—a perfect treasury of curiosities. The author of this volume brings chapter and verse to authenticate favourite legends and popular superstitions, and to enable us henceforth to believe as truth what has hitherto only been 'believed as a fable.' We have before us the result of most praiseworthy industry and most elaborate research."—Sun.
Be the cause what it may, the fact is certain that people never get tired of living at Rome, and people apparently never get tired of reading about Rome. . . All who have lived at Rome must be aware that Mr. Story has been long resident there, and has had unusual opportunities of learning to know that strange half-dead city as it lives and moves. We can commend his work to all persons who have either been to Rome, or think of going there."

"Whoever reads this book will rise from its perusal as well acquainted with the out-of-doors life of Rome as if he had spent years in the Eternal City. Nothing calculated to fix the attention or excite the interest of a stranger is omitted by Mr. Story in the ample record of his experience, which teems with the most vivid recollections and is expressed by the most picturesque details. An enumeration of the contents of his volumes is like the bill of fare of a promising dinner, and the contents themselves resemble the dinner when the cookery is first-rate."—Examiner.

"Mr. Cates, in his Pocket-book of Dates, has really done good service. He is evidently a lover of historical accuracy, and wishes every one to be like himself. In addition to a catalogue of names, the year of birth and death of each individual, his birthplace, and principal works, literary, military, artistic, or scientific, are also added, and the dry bones of chronology thereby made to assume a faint vitality. All this has been done carefully and well; great facts have not been overlaid by little ones, and much judgment has been shown in the omission of many subordinate events. We have only to add that the type and printing are clear and accurate, and that the 'get up' of the book adds another merit to those already mentioned."—Times, Nov. 28, 1863.

The Works of Shakespeare.
Edited by the Rev. Alexander Dyce.
This Edition is not a mere reprint of that which appeared in 1857; on the contrary, it will present a text very materially altered and amended from beginning to end, with a large body of critical Notes, almost entirely new, and with a Glossary, in which the language of the Poet, his allusions to customs, &c., will be fully explained.

Demy 8vo, 10s. each.

"The best text of Shakespeare which has yet appeared. Mr. Dyce's edition is a great work, worthy of his reputation, and for the present it contains the standard text."—Times, January 20, 1864.

"We have no space for more than a word of welcome to Mr. Dyce's new and beautifully printed edition of the Works of Shakespeare. As a critic of Shakespeare, Mr. Dyce combines qualifications which have never before met in one man; and, fearlessly following his own judgment, he is giving us an edition worthy of both editor and poet."—Quarterly Review, April, 1864.

"'Beppo the Conscript' is a charming story,—bright, spirited, and pleasant to read. "The story is a sad one, though it ends happily. The historical incidents, which chiefly concern the disastrous career of Lord Edward Fitzgerald, are melancholy, and the fanciful surroundings even more pathetic than the facts, yet the tone of the book is so admirably relieved by the occasional strain of humour and skilfully introduced anecdote which runs through it, that the impression created by it is never unpleasantly gloomy. . . . It is a story which represents the Irish temperament as faithfully as it chronicles Irish history; and whose many merits will lead the reader to believe that in the hitherto unknown author he welcomes a valuable addition to the ranks of modern novelists."—Morning Post.

UNDERMOUNT, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight.

SIR,—I have every reason to be highly satisfied with your "Food for Cattle," I had a cow in very low condition, not thriving, hide-bound, rough, and penney in her coat, no appetite. From the first day, a little of the Food appeared to change her whole system; in a month, she was sleek and soft in her skin, filled up in flesh, and gave three times the quantity of milk, and much richer; and has continued to thrive for more than twelve months. All attempts to underrate the Food are absurd.

Mr. Thorley.

From Fred Lowe, Esq.

Morden, near Mitcham.

SIR,—I bought a cow in August, 1859. The rings on her horns say she is fourteen years old, at least. I gave something like 4l. 10s. for her. She was supposed to be quite worn out and useless: but having good reason to think her in calf, I turned her into a good pasture with some young stock, and they were all taken into a comfortable yard at night, and had as much good hay and wortzel as they could eat. Still this old cow remained a bag of bones, till she calved the beginning of January, when I put her on to some of your Food (two measures a day) in two pecks of bran, hay, and a very little wortzel. She is perceptibly making flesh, looks cheerful, and is daily giving over fifteen quarts of rich milk. This is a very small cow, half-bred Jersey, and I shall be very happy to show her to any of your friends—or enemies, if they may call; and, as I do not know you personally, or have to my knowledge ever seen you; and having paid full price for what Food I have had, no one can accuse me of writing this letter with any other feeling than to assist in gaining the encouragement which is due to the Inventor of this very valuable food.

I am, yours faithfully,

FRED LOWE.

From Robert Irvine, Esq.

Kirby Stephen, Westmoreland.

SIR,—I have used your Food for my cattle since November last, and I am happy to say they are in excellent health and in much better condition, and give double the quantity of milk than before. I have never had any disease amongst them since using it, and shall constantly use it, being of opinion it is a great saving to every cowkeeper. I also found it an excellent thing for rearing pigs, making them eat the roughest meat with a good appetite.

Mr. Thorley.

Yours, &c. ROBERT IRVINE.

P.S.—My cows being in such great heart and condition, caused several of my neighbours to inquire of me what I had fed them on.

From David Bryant, Esq.

Pavenhall Farm, Purton, Wilts.

David Bryant, Esq. writes—"Last calf season I fattened on your food and milk the best twenty fat calves within fifty miles of Swindon at one farm, one of them weighed 208 lbs. at nine weeks and three days old. I also recommend your Food for cows, just as they calve, about one pint, made in a porridge, and given them about twice, after calving, which is a great help to the cow. I keep thirty cows, and serve them the same, which I find saves the doctor's bill by so doing.
Colonials taken from a File of Thousands.

Lieutenant-Colonel Hunter, of Mount Severn, states—"An experience of two years has given me reason to think very highly of your Food for Cattle, principally from the beneficial effects it has produced on two cows, whose condition has been much improved by it, as also the quantity and quality of their milk."

From Alfred Brown, Esq.

Wandsworth, Surrey.

Sir,—I shall feel obliged by your sending me another case of Thorley's Cattle Food. I have been making experiments with it upon one of my milch cows, and I think it only fair that I should let you know the results. My cow, before I used the Food, was fed upon hay, wortzel, and water ad libitum, and upon this diet she yielded one gallon of milk per day, making two pounds of butter per week. She was five months gone with her second calf; when she had the Food I discontinued giving her the wortzel, and gave her a measure-full (about half-a-pint) of the Food with a peck of damp chaff, night and morning; besides, she had as much good hay as she would eat. Upon this diet, in less than a week, she doubled the quantity of milk and butter; and in order that I might be sure that this excellent result depended upon Thorley's Food, I discontinued it, and returned to her former diet, and she speedily went back to the gallon of milk per day. After waiting about a fortnight, I again returned to the Thorley's Food, and in a few days she increased to two gallons of milk per day. This experiment I repeated several times, and with the same results. I have tried the Food upon other animals—horses, sheep, &c.—and with the most satisfactory results. You are at liberty to make any use you please of this communication; and I am, Sir, yours, &c.

To Mr. J. Thorley.

ALFRED BROWN.

The Rev. H. B. Newman, of Little Bromley, Manningtree,—

"Can safely affirm that it improved a cow which had been at death's door from cold and under-keep (to my certain knowledge) so much, that instead of being like one of Pharaoh's 'ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine,' in the course of a few weeks, chiefly by the use of your invaluable Food, mixed with chaff, twice a-day, the animal, (in comparison) really resembled one of those which are described as being 'well-favoured and fat-fleshed.'"

Park View Farm, Combermore Whitchurch, Salop.

Sir,—Thorley's Food answers well with milking cows. I have given it to all that are in pail. The milk yields more cream, consequently, more butter, and of an improved quality. I have also given it to the cattle that were stall-feeding, and it much improved their appetite, and kept their bowels in a healthy state, and they fatten faster. I also gave it to four young pigs that were ill from cold, scouring, &c. I am glad to say they are now quite recovered. I believe they would have died if trial of the Condiment had not been made.

Sir,—I shall feel obliged by your sending me another case of Thorley’s Castile Food. I have been making experiments with it upon one of my milch cows, and I think it only fair that I should let you know the results. My cow, before I used the Food, was fed upon hay, wortzel, and water ad libitum, and upon this diet she yielded one gallon of milk per day, making two pounds of butter per week. She was five months gone with her second calf, when I first the Food I discontinued giving her the wortzel, and gave her a measure-full (about half-a-pint) of the Food with a peck of damp chaff, night and morning; besides, she had as much good hay as she would eat. Upon this diet, in less than a week, she doubled the quantity of milk and butter; and in order that I might be sure that this excellent result depended upon Thorley’s Food, I discontinued it, and returned to her former diet, and she speedily went back to the gallon of milk per day. After waiting about a fortnight, I again returned to the Thorley’s Food, and in a few days she increased to two gallons of milk per day.

This experiment I repeated several times, and with the same result. I have tried the Food upon other animals—horses, sheep, &c.—and with the most satisfactory results. You are at liberty to make any use you please of this communication; and

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ALFRED BROWN.

The Rev. H. H. Newman, of Little Bromley, Mungingtree.—“I can safely affirm that it improved a cow which had been at death’s door from cold and under-keep (to my certain knowledge) so much, that instead of being like one of Pharaoh’s ‘ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine,’ in the course of a few weeks, chiefly by the use of your invaluable Food, mixed with chaff, twice a day, the animal, (in comparison) really resembled one of those which are described as being ‘well-favoured and fat-fleshed.’”

Park View Farm, Combermere Whitechurch, Salop.

Sir,—Thorley’s Food answers well with milking cows. I have given it to all that are in pain. The milk yields more cream, consequently, more butter, and of an improved quality. I have also given it to the cattle that were stung-feeding, and it much improved their appetite, and kept their bowels in a healthy state, and they fattened faster. I also gave it to four young pigs that were ill from cold, scurvy, &c. I am glad to say they are now quite recovered. I believe they would have died if trial of the Condiment had not been made.

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

J. WALL.

Baillif to F. M. the Right Hon. Viscount Combermore, Combermere Abbey.

FRY'S
HOMEOPATHIC COCOA MANUFACTURED BY
J. S. FRY & SONS,
BRISTOL, AND 252 CITY ROAD, LONDON,
CHOCOLATE AND COCOA MANUFACTURERS
BY APPOINTMENT
To the Queen and Prince of Wales.

Fry's
Homeopathic Cocoa,
is an article of great purity, combining the qualities sought for by invalids and consumers generally. It has been strongly approved and recommended by medical men, and its purity, delicacy of flavour, and nutritious qualities,
have rendered it a standard article of extensive consumption.

DIRECTIONS.
To obtain the full flavour from this Cocoa, add two table-spoonfuls to a pint of boiling water, and boil for three or four minutes. Or, being perfectly soluble, it may be made in the cup by beating a large tea-spoonful into a paste, with a little boiling water, and then filling the cup. Cream or milk, and sugar may be used, and the quantity of Cocoa regulated by the taste.

Sold in 1 lb., ½ lb., and ¼ lb. packets, by Tea Dealers, Grocers, and Druggists, throughout the United Kingdom, and in many of the Colonies.

The Only Prize Medal,
Exhibition, 1862,
Awarded to any English Manufacturer of
CHOCOLATE & COCOA, WAS OBTAINED BY
J. S. FRY & SONS.

J. S. FRY & SONS' Chocolate has been used by the Royal Family for more than 100 years, and they have been honoured with the appointments of Manufacturers to the Queen and Prince of Wales. In further proof of the position assigned to their articles by the most competent judges, they may mention that Prize Medals were awarded to them at the Four Great Exhibitions of the Industry of All Nations, LONDON 1851, NEW YORK 1853, PARIS 1855, and LONDON 1862.

The following are well-known descriptions of
J. S. FRY & SONS' Cocoas and Chocolates:

Fry's Homeopathic Cocoa (see other side).
Fry's Iceland Moss Cocoa, specially adapted for persons of weak digestion, who require nourishment in a light and concentrated form.
Fry's Pearl Cocoa, an excellent article at a moderate price.
Fry's Rock Cocoa, a fine full-flavoured Cocoa, possessing in a high degree the aroma of the Nut.
Fry's Cocoa Nibs, in 1-lb. packets, selected with great care. Ask for FRY'S Nibs.
Fry's Soluble Chocolate, a very convenient and popular article, of superior quality.
Fry's Chocolate for Eating, in Sticks and Drops, also in Fancy Boxes, in great variety, is very pure, nutritious, and wholesome.
Fry's Chocolate Creams, a very delicious sweetmeat.

General Report of DR. HASSALL, on the Cocoa and Chocolate manufactured by J. S. FRY AND SONS.

Having subjected the Cocoa and Chocolate, manufactured by Messrs. FRY AND SONS, to microscopical examination, and chemical analysis, I find that the different varieties of those articles made by the Messrs. FRY are prepared with the utmost care, and with ingredients of excellent quality; they are therefore wholesome and valuable articles of diet.

I should further state that I have also procured, unknown to Messrs. FRY, samples of their chief manufactures, as sold by dealers in the Metropolis; that I have likewise subjected these to analysis, and with similar favourable results.

In conclusion, I have no hesitation in expressing my belief that the public may rely at all times upon the purity and wholesomeness of every article bearing the name of J. S. FRY AND SONS, of BRISTOL.

GLENFIELD STARCH
EXCLUSIVELY USED IN THE ROYAL LAUNDRY.

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT,
STARCH PURVEYORS
TO HER ROYAL HIGHNESS
THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

The best proofs of the great superiority of this Starch are the numerous distinguished marks of approval which have been accorded to it from all quarters; amongst which may be mentioned the following, viz.:

IT IS EXCLUSIVELY USED IN THE ROYAL LAUNDRY,

AND

HER MAJESTY'S LAUNDRESS says it is the FINEST STARCH SHE EVER USED.

HONOURABLE MENTION was awarded it at the Great Exhibition in London, in 1851.

A PRIZE MEDAL was awarded for it at the New York Exhibition in 1853; and

A PRIZE MEDAL was also awarded for it at the International Exhibition in London, 1862.

HER MAJESTY'S LACE DRESSER says that it is the best she has tried; and

HUNDREDS OF GROCERS, &c., say that it pleases their Customers better than any other;

and perhaps the most striking proof of all is, that notwithstanding the great depression in the Cotton Manufacturing Trade, which influences the Starch trade materially, the demand for

THE GLENFIELD STARCH HAS CONTINUED TO INCREASE RAPIDLY.

The Manufacturers have every confidence in asserting, that if those Ladies and Laundresses who do not regularly use this Starch would disregard the advice of interested dealers, who are allowed extra profits on inferior articles, and give it a fair trial, they would then feel satisfied with the very superior finish which it imparts to Laces, Linens, Muslins, &c., the great saving of trouble in its application, and the entire absence of disappointment with the results, and would for the future, like

THE QUEEN'S LAUNDRESS, USE NO OTHER.

To be had of all respectable Grocers, Druggists, Oilmen, &c., &c., and wholesale of the Manufacturers,

The Furnishing of Bed-rooms.

HEAL and SON having observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a much larger selection of Bed-room Furniture than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of the different descriptions of Furniture, it is necessary that each description should be placed in separate rooms, have erected large and additional Show Rooms, by which they will be enabled not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass, and Wood Bedsteads, and Bed-room Furniture, beyond what they believe has ever been attempted; but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete suites of Bed-room Furniture in the different styles.

Japanned Deal Goods may be seen in complete suites of five or six different colours, some of them light and ornamental, and others of a plainer description. Suites of Stained Deal Gothic Furniture, Polished Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also set apart in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect as it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and from time to time new and select Furniture in various woods will be added.

Bed Furnitures are fitted to the Bedsteads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen, and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained as it would appear on the Bedstead.

A very large stock of Bedding (HEAL and Son’s original trade) is placed on the Bedsteads.

The stock of Mahogany Goods for the better Bed-rooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and Servants’ use, is very greatly increased. The entire Stock is arranged in eight rooms, six galleries, each 120 feet long, and two large ground floors, the whole forming as complete an assortment of Bed-room Furniture as they think can possibly be desired.

Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Cabinet work; and they have just erected large Workshops on the premises for this purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate care.

Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, every article being made on the premises.

They particularly call attention to their New Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and elastic, and lower in price than the old Spring Mattress.
