Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 60

Charles Dickens
Monsieur Humphrey's Clock

BY "BOZ,"

SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1841.

WITH

ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATERMOLLE & H. K. BROWNE.

BARNABY RUDGE.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND; PRICE 3d.

London: Chaplin and Hall, 186, Strand; Price 3d.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS.
Handsomely bound in cloth, with edges mottled, price 3s. each, the First and Second Volumes of MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK.

With ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATTERMOLE AND HABLOT BROWNE.
Each in One Volume octavo, price bound in cloth, 17s. 6d.; half-bound morocco, 17s. 6d.; whole-bound morocco, gilt, £1 1s. 6d.

THE ADVENTURES OF NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.
With ILLUSTRATIONS BY PHIZ.
AND A PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR, ENGRAVED BY FINDEN, FROM A PAINTING BY D. MACLISE, A.R.A.
THE PICKWICK PAPERS.
With FORTY-THREE ILLUSTRATIONS BY "PHIZ."

In three volumes, post-octavo, price 25s. cloth.

OLIVER TWIST.
Fifth Edition.
With an INTRODUCTION BY THE AUTHOR.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND. And sold by all Booksellers.

DODD'S ANGLO-ROMAN
STRINGS, (Manufactured to H. H. H. the Duke of Cambridge), for Violin, Violoncello, Viola, and Cello, containing all the qualities of the best Italian Strings. In clearness and brilliancy of tone they cannot be surpassed; for strength and durability they are unequalled, resisting the efforts of heated rooms and damp.-H. D. has received testimonials from Messrs. Lodge, Bagrow, William, Bantam, &c. To be had of Musical String Dealers throughout the kingdom, and of E. D. of Yorkhall Walls, Leeds.

NEW SONGS.—"The Alpine Shepherdess," by F. J. Jacques, sung with extraordinary success by Miss Adeline Cooper, beautifully illustrated, 6d. "The Old Watermill," by Russell. This admirable song is by the composer of "Woodman spare that tree," of which 10,000 copies have already been sold. "The Vale of Water," or, "Nant Guznant," sung by Miss Dulah and Miss Birch, and composed by John Parr, Jun., London: Jeffery and Nettles, 11, John Street.

CHESS FOR BEGINNERS,
IN A SERIES OF PROGRESSIVE LESSONS,
Showing the most approved method of beginning and ending the Game, together with various situations and Checkmates.

By WILLIAM LEWIS,
AUTHOR OF SEVERAL WORKS ON THE GAME.

With Twenty-four Diagrams printed in colours.

CHINA.—JOHN THOMAS BREAMEL & CO., having purchased the Business of the ROCKINGHAM CHINA WAREHOUSE, respectfully invite the Nobility, Gentry, and Public to Visit their extensive show-homes, where they have on view every kind of CHINA, GLASS, Improved IRON-STONE CHINA, and BURNISHEDWARE, of the first quality and most tempting patterns and price.—The "Giants," 225, Piccadilly, top of the Haymarket.

REFORM YOUR TAILOR'S BILLS!!!

GENTLEMEN'S
Superfine Dress Coats, 7s. 6d.
Extra Saxony, the best that is made . . 5 15
Superfine Frock Coat, silk buttons . . 10 0
Ruskinck Trousers . . . 1 10
Cloth or double-milled Cambricenedo. 4 1 6

LADIES ELEGANT
New Patterns, Summer Trousers, 6s. 6d. per pair, or three pair . . 1 10
Romance Waistcoats 7 ½ or three 1 0

City Clothing Establishment, Established 1784.

GENTLEMEN'S
Splendid Silk Valenciennes Dresses
Waiscoats 16s. 6d., or 10s. 10 0
Morning Coats & Dressing
Gowns . . 15 0
Cloth Opera Cloak . . 1 10
Army Cloth Balmoral
Cloak, 10 yards round . . 2 10
Super Cloth Cloaks . . . . . . . 3 0
Cloth or Tweed Fishing or Travelling Trousers . . . . 1 13

LADIES ELEGANT
riding Habit

FIRST-RATE
CLOTHING
Skeleton Dresses
Tunic & Dresser Suits . . . . . . 14 6

COUNTRY GENTLEMEN, preferring their Clothes Fashionably made at a FIRST-RATE LONDON HOUSE, are respectfully informed, that by a post-paid Application, they will receive a Prospectus explanatory of the System of Business, Directions for Measurement, and a Statement of Prices. Or if three or Four Gentlemen unite, one of the Travellers will be dispatched immediately to wait on them.

DOUDNEY & SON, 49, LOMBARD ST.—ESTABLISHED 1784.
CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

Mr. Haredale stood in the widow’s parlour with the door-key in his hand, gazing by turns at Mr. Chester and at Gabriel Varden, and occasionally glancing downward at the key as in the hope that of its own accord it would unlock the mystery; until Mr. Chester, putting on his hat and gloves, and sweetly inquiring whether they were walking in the same direction, recalled him to himself.

“No,” he said. “Our roads diverge—widely, as you know. For the present, I shall remain here.”

“You will be hipped, Haredale; you will be miserable, melancholy, utterly wretched,” returned the other. “It is a place of the very last description for a man of your temper. I know it will make you very miserable.”

“Let it,” said Mr. Haredale, sitting down; “and thrive upon the thought. Good night!”

Feigning to be wholly unconscious of the abrupt wave of the hand which rendered this farewell tantamount to a dismissal, Mr. Chester retorted with a bland and heartfelt benediction, and inquired of Gabriel in what direction he was going.

“Yours, sir, would be too much honour for the like of me,” replied the locksmith, hesitating.

“I wish you to remain here a little while, Varden,” said Mr. Haredale without looking towards them. “I have a word or two to say to you.”

“I will not intrude upon your conference another moment,” said Mr. Chester with inconceivable politeness. “May it be satisfactory to you both! God bless you!” So saying, and bestowing upon the locksmith a most resplendent smile, he left them.

“A deplorably constituted creature, that rugged person,” he said, as he walked along the street; “he is an atrocity that carries its own punishment along with it—a bear that gnaws himself. And here is one of the inestimable advantages of having a perfect command over one’s inclinations. I have been tempted in these two short interviews, to draw upon that fellow, fifty times. Five men in six would have yielded to the impulse. By suppressing mine, I wound him deeper and more keenly than if I were the best swordsman in all Europe, and be the worst. You are the wise man’s very last resource,” he said, tapping the hilt of his weapon; “we can but appeal to you when all else is said and done. To come to you before, and thereby spare our adversaries so much, is a barbarian mode of warfare, quite unworthy any man with the remotest pretensions to delicacy of feeling, or refinement.”

He smiled so very pleasantly as he communed with himself after this manner, that a beggar was emboldened to follow him for alms, and to dog his footsteps for some distance. He was gratified by the circumstance, feeling it complimentary to his power of feature, and as a reward suffered the man to follow him until he called a chair, when he graciously dismissed him with a fervent blessing.
"Which is as easy as cursing," he wisely added, as he took his seat, "and more becoming to the face.—To Clerkstonwell, my good creatures, if you please!"

The chairman were rendered quite vivacious by having such a courteous burden, and to Clerkstonwell they went at a fair round trot.

Alighting at a certain point he had indicated to them upon the road, and paying them something less than they had expected from a fare of such gentle speech, he turned into the street in which the locksmith dwelt, and presently stood beneath the shadow of the Golden Key. Mr. Tapperit, who was hard at work by lamp-light, in a corner of the workshop, remained unconscious of his presence until a hand upon his shoulder made him start and turn his head.

"Industry," said Mr. Chester, "is the soul of business, and the key-stone of prosperity. Mr. Tapperit, I shall expect you to invite me to dinner when you are Lord Mayor of London."

"Sir," returned the prentice, laying down his hammer, and rubbing his nose on the back of a very sooty hand, "I scorn the Lord Mayor and everything that belongs to him. We must have another state of society, sir, before you catch me being Lord Mayor. How do de sir?"

"The better, Mr. Tapperit, for looking into your ingenuous face once more. I hope you are well."

"I am as well, sir," said Sim, standing up to get nearer to his ear, and whispering hoarsely, "as any man can be under the aggravations to which I am exposed. My life's a burden to me. If it wasn't for vengeance, I'd play at pitch and toss with it on the losing hazard."

"Is Mrs. Varden at home?" said Mr. Chester.

"Sir," returned Sim, eyeing him over with a look of concentrated expression, "she is. Did you wish to see her?"

Mr. Chester nodded.

"Then come this way, sir," said Sim, wiping his face upon his apron.

"Follow me, sir.—Would you permit me to whisper in your ear, one half a second?"

"By all means."

Mr. Tapperit raised himself on tiptoe, applied his lips to Mr. Chester's ear, drew back his head without saying anything, looked hard at him, applied them to his ear again, again drew back, and finally whispered—"The name is Joseph Willet. Hush! I say no more."

Having said that much, he beckoned the visitor with a mysterious aspect to follow him to the parlour door, where he announced him in the voice of a gentleman-usher. "Mr. Chester."

"And not Mr. Ed'dard, mind," said Sim, looking into the door again and adding this by way of postscript in his own person; "it's his father."

"But do not let his father," said Mr. Chester, advancing hat in hand, as he observed the effect of this last explanatory announcement, "do not let his father be any check or restraint on your domestic occupations, Miss Varden."

"Oh! Now! There! An't I always a saying it!" exclaimed Miggs, clapping her hands. "If he ain't been and took Miss for her own daughter. Well, she do look like it, that she do. Ony think of that, miss!"
“Is it possible” said Mr. Chester in his softest tones, “that this is Mrs. Varden! I am amazed. That is not your daughter, Mrs Varden? No, no. Your sister.”

“My daughter, indeed sir,” returned Mrs. V., blushing with great juvenility. “Ah, Mrs. Varden!” cried the visitor. “Ah, ma’am—humanity is indeed a happy lot, when we can repeat ourselves in others, and still be young as they. You must allow me to salute you—the custom of the country, my dear madam—your daughter too.”

Dolly showed some reluctance to perform this ceremony, but was sharply reproved by Mrs. Varden, who insisted on her undergoing it that minute. For pride, she said with great severity, was one of the seven deadly sins, and humility and lowliness of heart were virtues. Wherefore she desired that Dolly would be kissed immediately, on pain of her just displeasure; at the same time giving her to understand that whatever she saw her mother do, she might safely do herself, without being at the trouble of any reasoning or reflection on the subject—which, indeed, was offensive and undutiful, and in direct contravention of the church catechism. Thus admonished, Dolly complied, though by no means willingly; for there was a broad, bold look of admiration in Mr. Chester’s face, refined and polished though it sought to be, which distressed her very much. As she stood with downcast eyes, not liking to look up and meet his, he gazed upon her with an approving air, and then turned to her mother.

“My friend Gabriel (whose acquaintance I only made this very evening) should be a happy man, Mrs. Varden.”

“Ah!” sighed Mrs. V., shaking her head. “Ah!” echoed Miss Miggs. “Is that the case?” said Mr. Chester, compassionately. “Dear me!”

“Master has no intentions sir,” murmured Miggs as she sidled up to him, “but to be as grateful as his nature will let him, for everything he owns which it is in his powers to appreciate. But we never sir”—said Miggs, looking sideways at Mrs. Varden, and interlarding her discourse with a sigh—“we never know the full value of some wines and fig-trees till we lose ’em. So much the worse sir, for them as has the slighting of ’em on their consciences when they’re gone to be in full blow elsewhere.” And Miss Miggs cast up her eyes to signify where that might be.

As Mrs. Varden distinctly heard, and was intended to hear, all that Miggs said, and as these words appeared to convey in metaphorical terms a preage or foreboding that she would at some early period droop beneath her trials and take an easy flight towards the stars, she immediately began to languish, and taking a volume of the Manual from a neighbouring table, leant her arm upon it, as though she were Hope and that her Anchor. Mr. Chester perceiving this, and seeing how the volume was lettered on the back, took it gently from her hand, and turned the fluttering leaves.

“My favourite book, dear madam. How often, how very often in his early life—before he can remember”—(this clause was strictly true) “have I deduced little easy moral lessons from its pages, for my dear son Ned! You know Ned!”
Mrs. Varden had that honour, and a fine affable young gentleman he was.

"You’re a mother, Mrs. Varden" said Mr. Chester, taking a pinch of snuff, "and you know what I, as a father, feel, when he is praised. He gives me some uneasiness—much uneasiness—he’s of a roving nature, ma’am—from flower to flower—from sweet to sweet—but his is the butterfly time of life, and we must not be hard upon such trifling."

He glanced at Dolly. She was attending evidently to what he said. Just what he desired!

"The only thing I object to in this little trait of Ned’s, is," said Mr. Chester, "—and the mention of his name reminds me, by the way, that I am about to beg the favour of a minute’s talk with you alone—the only thing I object to in it, is, that it does partake of insincerity. Now, however I may attempt to disguise the fact from myself in my affection for Ned, still I always revert to this—that if we are not sincere, we are nothing. Nothing upon earth. Let us be sincere, my dear madam—"

"—and Protestant," murmured Mrs. Varden.

"—and Protestant above all things. Let us be sincere and Protestant, strictly moral, strictly just (though always with a leaning towards mercy), strictly honest, and strictly true, and we gain—it is a slight point, certainly, but still it is something tangible; we throw up a groundwork and foundation, so to speak, of goodness, on which we may afterwards erect some worthy superstructure."

Now, to be sure, Mrs. Varden thought, here is a perfect character. Here is a meek, righteoun, thorough-going Christian, who, having mastered all these qualities, so difficult of attainment; who, having dropped a pinch of salt on the tails of all the cardinal virtues, and caught them every one; makes light of their possession, and pants for more morality. For the good woman never doubted (as many good men and women never do), that this slighting kind of profession, this setting so little store by great matters, this seeming to say "I am not proud, I am what you hear, but I consider myself no better than other people; let us change the subject, pray"—was perfectly genuine and true. He so contrived it, and said it in that way that it appeared to have been forced from him, and its effect was marvellous.

Aware of the impression he had made—few men were quicker than he at such discoveries—Mr. Chester followed up the blow by propounding certain virtuous maxims, somewhat vague and general in their nature, doubtless, and occasionally partaking of the character of truisms, worn a little out at elbow, but delivered in so charming a voice and with such uncommon serenity and peace of mind, that they answered as well as the best. Nor is this to be wondered at; for as hollow vessels produce a far more musical sound in falling than those which are substantial, so it will oftentimes be found that sentiments which have nothing in them make the loudest ringing in the world, and are the most relished.

Mr. Chester, with the volume gently extended in one hand, and with the other planted lightly on his breast, talked to them in the most delicious manner possible; and quite enchanted all his hearers, notwithstanding their conflicting interests and thoughts. Even Dolly, who, between his keen regards and her eyeing over by Mr. Tappertit, was put quite out of countenance, could not help owning within herself that he was the sweetest-spoken gentleman she had ever seen. Even Miss Miggins, who was divided between admiration of Mr. Chester and a mortal jealousy of her young mistress, had sufficient leisure to be propitiated. Even Mr. Tappertit, though occupied as we have seen in gazing at his heart’s delight, could not wholly divert his thoughts from the voice of the other charmer. Mrs. Varden, to her own private thinking, had never been so improved in all her life; and when Mr. Chester, rising and craving permission to speak with her apart, took her by the hand and led her at arm’s length up stairs to the best sitting-room, she almost deemed him something more than human.

“Dear madam,” he said, pressing her hand delicately to his lips; “be seated.”

Mrs. Varden called up quite a courtly air, and became seated.

“You guess my object?” said Mr. Chester, drawing a chair towards her. “You divine my purpose? I am an affectionate parent, my dear Mrs. Varden.”

“That I am sure you are sir,” said Mrs. V. V.

“Thank you,” returned Mr. Chester, tapping his snuff-box lid. “Heavy moral responsibilities rest with parents, Mrs. Varden.”

Mrs. Varden slightly raised her hands, shook her head, and looked at the ground as though she saw straight through the globe, out at the other end, and into the immensity of space beyond.
“I may confide in you,” said Mr. Chester, “without reserve. I love my son, ma’am, dearly; and loving him as I do, I would save him from working certain misery. You know of his attachment to Miss Haredale. You have abetted him in it, and very kind of you it was to do so. I am deeply obliged to you—most deeply obliged to you—for your interest in his behalf; but my dear ma’am, it is a mistaken one, I do assure you.”

Mrs. Varden stammered that she was sorry—

“Sorry, my dear ma’am,” he interposed. “Never be sorry for what is so very amiable, so very good in intention, so perfectly like yourself. But there are grave and weighty reasons, pressing family considerations, and apart even from these, points of religious difference, which interpose themselves, and render their union impossible; utterly impossible. I should have mentioned these circumstances to your husband; but he has—you will excuse my saying this so freely—he has not your quickness of apprehension or depth of moral sense. What an extremely airy house this is, and how beautifully kept! For one like myself—a widower so long—these tokens of female care and superintendence have inexpressible charms.”

Mrs. Varden began to think (she scarcely know why) that the young Mr. Chester must be in the wrong, and the old Mr. Chester must be in the right.

“My son Ned,” resumed her tempter with his most winning air, “has had, I am told, your lovely daughter’s aid, and your open-hearted husband’s.”

“—Much more than mine sir,” said Mrs Varden; “a great deal more. I have often had my doubts. It’s a—”

“A bad example,” suggested Mr. Chester. “It is. No doubt it is. Your daughter is at that age when to set before her an encouragement for young persons to rebel against their parents on this most important point, is particularly injudicious. You are quite right. I ought to have thought of that myself, but it escaped me, I confess—so far superior are your sex to ours, dear madam, in point of penetration and sagacity.”

Mrs. Varden looked as wise as if she had really said something to deserve this compliment—firmly believed she had, in short—and her faith in her own shrewdness increased considerably.

“My dear ma’am,” said Mr. Chester, “you embolden me to be plain with you. My son and I are at variance on this point. The young lady and her natural guardian differ upon it, also. And the closing point is, that my son is bound by his duty to me, by his honour, by every solemn tie and obligation, to marry some one else.”

“Engaged to marry another lady!” quoth Mrs. Varden, holding up her hands.

“My dear madam, brought up, educated, and trained, expressly for that purpose. Expressly for that purpose.—Miss Haredale, I am told, is a very charming creature.

“I am her foster-mother, and should know—the best young lady in the world,” said Mrs. Varden.
"I have not the smallest doubt of it. I am sure she is. And you, who have stood in that tender relation towards her, are bound to consult her happiness. Now, can I—as I have said to Haredale, who quite agrees—can I possibly stand by, and suffer her to throw herself away (although she is of a catholic family), upon a young fellow who, as yet, has no heart at all? It is no imputation upon him to say he has not, because young men who have plunged deeply into the frivolities and conventionalities of society, very seldom have. Their hearts never grow, my dear madam, till after thirty. I don't believe, no, I do not believe, that I had any heart myself when I was Nod's age."

"Oh, sir," said Mrs. Varden, "I think you must have had. It's impossible that you, who have so much now, can ever have been without any."

"I hope," he answered, shrugging his shoulders meekly, "I have a little; I hope, a very little—Heaven knows! But to return to Ned; I have no doubt you thought, and therefore interfered benevolently in his behalf, that I objected to Miss Haredale. How very natural! My dear madam, I object to him—to him—emphatically to Ned himself."

Mrs. Varden was perfectly aghast at the disclosure.

"He has, if he honourably fulfils this solemn obligation of which I have told you—and he must be honourable, dear Mrs. Varden, or he is no son of mine—a fortune within his reach. He is of most expensive, ruinously expensive habits; and if, in a moment of caprice and wilfulness, he were to marry this young lady, and so deprive himself of the means of gratifying the tastes to which he has been so long accustomed, he would—my dear madam, he would break the gentle creature's heart. Mrs. Varden, my good lady, my dear soul, I put it to you—is such a sacrifice to be endured? Is the female heart a thing to be trifled with in this way? Ask your own, my dear madam. Ask your own, I beseech you."

"Truly," thought Mrs. Varden, "this gentleman is a saint. But," she added aloud, and not unnaturally, "if you take Miss Emma's lover away, sir, what becomes of the poor thing's heart, then?"

"The very point," said Mr. Chester, not at all abashed, "to which I wished to lead you. A marriage with my son, whom I should be compelled to disown, would be followed by years of misery; they would be separated, my dear madam, in a twelvemonth. To break off this attachment, which is more fancied than real, as you and I know very well, will cost the dear girl but a few tears, and she is happy again. Take the ease of your own daughter, the young lady downstairs, who is your breathing image—Mrs. Varden coughed and simpered—and there is a young man, (I am sorry to say a dissolute fellow, of very indifferent character,) of whom I have heard Ned speak—Bullet was it—Pullet—Mullet."

"There is a young man of the name of Joseph Willet, sir," said Mrs. Varden, folding her hands loftily.

"That's he," cried Mr. Chester. "Suppose this Joseph Willet now, were to aspire to the affections of your charming daughter, and were to engage them."

"It would be like his impudence," interposed Mrs. Varden, bridling, "to dare to think of such a thing!"
“My dear madam, that’s the whole case. I know it would be like his impudence. It is like Noel’s impudence to do as he has done; but you would not on that account, or because of a few tears from your beautiful daughter, refrain from checking their inclinations in their birth. I meant to have reasoned thus with your husband when I saw him at Mrs. Rudge’s this evening—”

“My husband,” said Mrs. Varden, interposing with emotion, “would be a great deal better at home than going to Mrs. Rudge’s so often. I don’t know what he does there. I don’t see what occasion he has to buy himself in her fair at all, sir.”

“If I don’t appear to express my concurrence in those last sentiments of yours,” returned Mr. Chester, “quite so strongly as you might desire, it is because his being there, my dear madam, and not proving conversational, led me hither, and procured me the happiness of this interview with one, in whom the whole management, conduct, and prosperity of her family are centred, I perceive.”

With that he took Mrs. Varden’s hand again, and having pressed it to his lips with the high-flown gallantry of the day—a little burlesqued to render it the more striking in the good lady’s unaccustomed eyes—proceeded in the same strain of mingled sophistry, coquetry, and flattery, to entreat that her utmost influence might be exerted to restrain her husband and daughter from any further promotion of Edward’s suit to Miss Haredale, and from aiding or abetting either party in any way. Mrs. Varden was but a woman, and had her share of vanity, obstinacy, and love of power. She entered into a secret treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, with her insinuating visitor; and really did believe, as many others would have done who saw and heard him, that in so doing she furthered the ends of truth, justice, and morality, in a very uncommon degree.

Overjoyed by the success of his negotiation, and mightily amused within himself, Mr. Chester conducted her down stairs in the same state as before; and having repeated the previous ceremony of salutation, which also as before comprehended Dolly, took his leave; first completing the conquest of Miss Miggs’s heart, by inquiring if “this young lady” would light him to the door.

“Oh, mim,” said Miggs, returning with the candle. “Oh gracious me, mim, there’s a gentleman! Was there ever such an angel to talk as he is—and such a sweet-looking man! So upright and noble, that he seems to despise the very ground he walks on; and yet so mild and condescending, that he seems to say ‘but I will take notice on it too.’ And to think of his taking you for Miss Dolly, and Miss Dolly for your sister—Oh, my goodness me, if I was master wouldn’t I be jealous of him!”

Mrs. Varden reproved her handmaid for this vain-speaking; but very gently and mildly—quite smilingly indeed—remarking that she was a foolish, giddy, light-headed girl, whose spirits carried her beyond all bounds, and who didn’t mean half she said, or she would be quite angry with her.

“For my part,” said Dolly, in a thoughtful manner, “I half believe Mr. Chester is something like Miggs in that respect. For all his politeness and pleasant speaking, I am pretty sure he was making game of us, more than once."

"If you venture to say such a thing again, and to speak ill of people behind their backs in my presence, Miss," said Mrs. Varden, "I shall insist upon your taking a candle and going to bed directly. How dare you, Dolly? I'm astonished at you. The rudeness of your whole behaviour this evening has been disgraceful. Did anybody ever hear," cried the enraged matron, bursting into tears, "of a daughter telling her own mother she has been made game of!"

What a very uncertain temper Mrs. Varden's was!

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

REPAIRING to a noted coffee-house in Covent Garden when he left the locksmith's, Mr. Chester sat long over a late dinner, entertaining himself exceedingly with the whimsical recollection of his recent proceedings, and congratulating himself very much on his great cleverness. Influenced by these thoughts, his face wore an expression so benign and tranquil, that the waiter in immediate attendance upon him felt he could almost have died in his defence, and settled in his own mind (until the receipt of the bill, and a very small fee for very great trouble disabused it of the idea) that such an apostolic customer was worth half-a-dozen of the ordinary run of visitors, at least.

A visit to the gaming-table—not as a heated, anxious venturer, but one whom it was quite a treat to see staking his two or three pieces in deference to the follies of society, and smiling with equal benevolence on winners and losers—made it late before he reached home. It was his custom to bid his servant go to bed at his own time unless he had orders to the contrary, and to leave a candle on the common stair. There was a lamp on the landing by which he could always light it when he came home late, and having a key of the door about him he could enter and go to bed at his pleasure.

He opened the glass of the dull lamp, whose wick, burnt up and swollen like a drunkard's nose, came flying off in little carbuncles at the candle's touch, and scattering hot sparks about rendered it matter of some difficulty to kindle the lazy taper; when a noise, as of a man snoring deeply some steps higher up, caused him to pause and listen. It was the heavy breathing of a sleeper, close at hand. Some fellow had lain down on the open staircase, and was slumbering soundly. Having lighted the candle at length and opened his own door, he softly ascended, holding the taper high above his head, and peering cautiously about; curious to see what kind of man had chosen so comfortless a shelter for his lodging.

With his head upon the landing and his great limbs flung over half a dozen stairs, as carelessly as though he were a dead man whom drunken bearers had thrown down by chance, there lay Hugh, face uppermost, his long hair drooping like some wild weed upon his wooden pillow, and his huge chest heaving with the sounds which so unwontedly disturbed the place and hour.
He who came upon him so unexpectedly was about to break his rest by thrusting him with his foot, when, glancing at his upturned face, he arrested himself in the very action, and stooping down and shading the candle with his hand, examined his features closely. Close as his first inspection was, it did not suffice, for he passed the light, still carefully shaded as before, across and across his face, and yet observed him with a searching eye.

While he was thus engaged, the sleeper, without any starting or turning round, awoke. There was a kind of fascination in meeting his steady gaze so suddenly, which took from the other the presence of mind to withdraw his eyes, and forced him, as it were, to meet his look. So they remained staring at each other, until Mr. Chester at last broke silence, and asked him in a low voice, why he lay sleeping there.

"I thought," said Hugh, struggling into a sitting posture and gazing at him intently, still, "that you were a part of my dream. It was a curious one. I hope it may never come true, master."

"What makes you shiver?"

"The— the cold, I suppose," he growled, as he shook himself, and rose. "I hardly know where I am yet."

"Do you know me?" said Mr. Chester.

"Ay, I know you," he answered. "I was dreaming of you—we're not where I thought we were. That's a comfort."

He looked round him as he spoke, and in particular looked above his head, as though he half expected to be standing under some object which had had existence in his dream. Then he rubbed his eyes and shook himself again, and followed his conductor into his own rooms.

Mr. Chester lighted the candles which stood upon his dressing-table, and wheeling an easy chair towards the fire, which was yet burning, stirred up a cheerful blaze, sat down before it, and bade his uncouth visitor "Come here," and drew his boots off.

"You have been drinking again, my fine fellow," he said, as Hugh went down on one knee, and did as he was told.

"As I'm alive, master, I've walked the twelve long miles, and waited here I don't know how long, and had no drink between my lips since dinner-time at noon."

"And can you do nothing better, my pleasant friend, than fall asleep, and shake the very building with your snores?" said Mr. Chester. "Can't you dream in your straw at home, dull dog as you are, that you need come here to do it!—Reach me those slippers, and tread softly."

Hugh obeyed in silence.

"And harkee, my dear young gentleman," said Mr. Chester, as he put them on, "the next time you dream, don't let it be of me, but of some dog or horse with whom you are better acquainted. Fill the glass once—you'll find it and the bottle in the same place—and empty it to keep yourself awake."

Hugh obeyed again—even more zealously—and having done so, presented himself before his patron.

"Now," said Mr. Chester, "what do you want with me?"
"There was news to-day," returned Hugh. "Your son was at our house—came down on horseback. He tried to see the young woman, but couldn't get sight of her. He left some letter or some message which our Joe had charge of, but he and the old one quarrelled about it when your son had gone, and the old one wouldn't let it be delivered. He says (that's the old one does) that none of his people shall interfere and get him into trouble. He's a landlord he says, and lives on everybody's custom."

"He is a jewel," smiled Mr. Chester, "and the better for being a dull one.—Well?"

"Varden's daughter—that's the girl I kissed—" said Mr. Chester, composedly. "Yes; what of her!"

"She wrote a note at our house to the young woman, saying she lost the letter I brought to you, and you burnt. Our Joe was to carry it, but the old one kept him at home all next day, on purpose that he shouldn't. Next morning he gave it to me to take; and here it is."

"You didn't deliver it then, my good friend?" said Mr. Chester, twirling Dolly's note between his finger and thumb, and feigning to be surprised.

"I supposed you'd want to have it," retorted Hugh. "Burn one, burn all. I thought."

"My devil-may-care acquaintance," said Mr. Chester—"really if you do not draw some nicer distinctions, your career will be cut short with most surprising suddenness. Don't you know that the letter you brought to me, was directed to my son who resides in this very place? And can you discern no difference between his letters and those addressed to other people?"

"If you don't want it," said Hugh, disconcerted by this reproof, for he had expected high praise, "give it me back, and I'll deliver it. I don't know how to please you, master."

"I shall deliver it," returned his patron, putting it away after a moment's consideration, "myself. Does the young lady walk out, on fine mornings?"

"Mostly—about noon is her usual time."

"Yes, alone."

"Where?"

"In the grounds before the house.—Then that the footpath crosses."

"If the weather should be fine, I may throw myself in her way to-morrow, perhaps," said Mr. Chester, as coolly as if she were one of his ordinary acquaintances. "Mr. Hugh, if I should ride up to the Maypole door, you will do me the favour only to have seen me once. You must suppress your gratitude, and endeavour to forget my forbearance in the matter of the bracelet. It is natural it should break out, and it does you honour; but when other folks are by, you must, for your own sake and safety, be as like your usual self as though you owed me no obligation whatever, and had never stood within these walls. You comprehend me?"

Hugh understood him perfectly. After a pause he muttered that he hoped his patron would involve him in no trouble about this last letter; for he had kept it back solely with the view of pleasing him. He was continuing in this strain, when Mr. Chester with a most beneficent and patronising air cut him short by saying:

"My good fellow, you have my promise, my word, my sealed bond (for a verbal pledge with me is quite as good), that I will always protect you so long as you deserve it. Now, do set your mind at rest. Keep it at ease, I beg of you. When a man puts himself in my power so thoroughly as you have done, I really feel as though he had a kind of claim upon me. I am more disposed to mercy and forbearance under such circumstances than I can tell you, Hugh. Do look upon me as your protector, and rest assured, I entreat you, that on the subject of that indiscretion, you may preserve, as long as you and I are friends, the lightest heart that ever beat within a human breast. Fill that glass once more to cheer you on your road homewards—I am really quite ashamed to think how far you have to go—and then God bless you for the night."

"They think," said Hugh, when he had tossed the liquor down, "that I am sleeping soundly in the stable. Ha ha ha! The stable door is shut, but the steed's gone, master."

"You are a most convivial fellow," returned his friend, "and I love your humour of all things. Good night! Take the greatest possible care of yourself, for my sake!"

It was remarkable that during the whole interview, each had endeavoured to catch stolen glances of the other's face, and had never looked full at it. They interchanged one brief and hasty glance as Hugh went out, averted their eyes directly, and so separated. Hugh closed the double doors behind him, carefully and without noise; and Mr. Chester remained in his easy chair, with his gaze intently fixed upon the fire.

"Well!" he said, after meditating for a long time—and said with a deep sigh and an uneasy shifting of his attitude, as though he dismissed some other subject from his thoughts, and returned to that which had held possession of them all the day—"the plot thickens; I have thrown the shell; it will explode, I think, in eight-and-forty hours, and should scatter these good folks amazingly. We shall see!"

He went to bed and fell asleep, but had not slept long when he started up and thought that Hugh was at the outer door, calling in a strange voice, very different from his own, to be admitted. The delusion was so strong upon him, and was so full of that vague terror of the night in which such visions have their being, that he rose, and taking his sheathed sword in his hand, opened the door, and looked out upon the staircase, and towards the spot where Hugh had lain asleep; and even spoke to him by name. But all was dark and quiet, and creeping back to bed again, he fell, after an hour's uneasy watching, into a second sleep, and woke no more till morning.
CARPET & FLOOR-CLOTH MANUFACTORY.—The largest House in London for Carpets of the newest designs and best quality, Floor Cloths, Druggets, Gills, Counterpanes, Blankets, Damasks, Satinets, Table Covers, Rug Mats, and Fringes, of every description. Element & Knight, 23, Holborn, opposite Red Lion-street.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. JOSEPH GILLOTT'S very superior PATTERNS or METALLIC PENS may be had at all Stations, Booksellers, and other dealers in Pens throughout the United Kingdom.—The superiority of the字符 which these Pens have attained with the Public is the great and regular increasing demand for them.—The number of Pens manufactured at the works of JOSEPH GILLOTT.

or £3,360,823.5s. 3d. or 210,066 gr. 2 lbs. 7 oz. or 219,106 gr. 3 lbs. 2 oz.

Please observe—all the genuine Pens are marked in full, Joseph Gillott, Wholesale and for Exportation at the manufactory Victoria Works, Graham-street, Birmingham.

HARVEY'S FISH SAUCE.

Lazenby and Son, sole Proprietors of the Patent Fermented Fish Sauce, respectfully offer the Receipt for this much-esteemed SAUCE, respectfully request for this much-esteemed SAUCE, respectfully offer the Receipt for this much-esteemed SAUCE.

A NEW DISCOVERY.

R. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, begs to introduce an entirely NEW DESCRIPTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures, STRONGLY MODERATE CHARGES. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the least observer, they will never crumbling or decay, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any attempts at working the teeth rendered sound and useful in mastication.—To guard the Nobility against the fraudulent attempts of quacks and moonshines, each Brush is distinctly marked on the handle "J. J. Lowndes & Co., 109, New Bond-street." Post orders for these and any part of the Kingdom free of postage.

FASHIONABLE PERFUMES.

ROYAL EXTRACT OF FLOWERS. ESSENCE OF SWEETBRIAR.

These Bouquets, combining piquancy with durability, have obtained the enviable title of the leading fashionable Perfumes of the Day. THE ROYAL VICTORIA BOUQUET. THE ROYAL ALBERT BOUQUET, and the new Perfume for Ladies, 139, Fleet-street.

MANUFACTURERS TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

DELACROIX'S TOOTH-BRUSHES, Celebrated for being made on a principle that the Hair never get loose, or come out in the mouth; they search thoroughly into the divisions of the Teeth, and clean in the most extraordinary and effectual manner.—To guard the Nobility against the fraudulent attempts of quacks and moonshines, each Brush is distinctly marked on the handle "2. Delacroix & Co., 109, New Bond-street." Post orders for these and any part of the Kingdom free of postage.

SUMMER COATS, HALF-A-GUINEA.

Doudney's, 97, Fleet Street.