1841

Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 61

Charles Dickens

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge

Recommended Citation
Dickens, Charles, "Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 61" (1841). Barnaby Rudge. 16.
https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge/16

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Novels at Digital WPI. It has been accepted for inclusion in Barnaby Rudge by an authorized administrator of Digital WPI. For more information, please contact digitalwpi@wpi.edu.
MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK
BY "BOZ,"
SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1841.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATTERMOLE & H. E. BROWNE.

BARNABY RUDGE.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND;
J. MURCH, Edinburgh; J. FULAY & Co., Glasgow; I. SMITH, Aberdeen; S. J. MACRE, Dublin; SAMS & DUNCAN, Manchester;
WAKINS, WARD, Liverpool; WATSON & WARD, Birmingham; S. SMITH & Son, Bath; LOWT & RIDDLES, Bristol; T. N. MOOR, Boston; H. S. KING, Brighton; G. THOMPSON, Bury; E. JOHNSON, Cambridge; C. T. W. TURNER, Carlisle; J. J. LEE, Cheltenham; E. & DICKIN, Chester; W. EDWARDS, Coventry; W. ROWBOTHAM, Derby; W. F. Evans, Devonport; W. F. BROWN, Exeter; T. TAYLOR, Gloucester; R. CUMMINS, Hull; HENRY BRADNHOR, Ipswich; W. HAYES, LITCHFIELD; T. HARDING, Leeds; J. SUTTON, Maidstone; FULAY & CHALMERS, Newcastle-on-Tyne; JARROLD & SON, Norwich; R. MACRE, Nottingham; H. SLATER, Oxford; E. DUMFRIES, Perth;
E. NETTLETON, Plymouth; G. LEWIS, Reading; HOBES & Co., Salisbury; JOHN INNESS, Sheffield; W. SMITH, Southampton;
F. MAY, TOTTENHAM; A. MUNRO, Worcester; W. ALEXANDER, Yarmouth; J. SHEPPARD, York; J. T. BROWN, Wrexham; and sold by all Booksellers and Newsagents.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

Price 2s., illustrated with Woodcuts of Birds, Cages, &c., a New Edition of

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF CAGE BIRDS;
THERM MANAGEMENT, HABITS, FOOD, DISEASES, TREATMENT, BREEDING, & THE METHODS OF CATCHING THEM.

BY J. M. BECHSTEIN, M.D.

THE HAND-BOOK FOR THE PEOPLE.

THE HAND-BOOK OF BATHING.

Price 6d.

THE HAND-BOOK OF GARDENING;

THE HAND-BOOK OF BOTANY;
Or, Elementary Lessons on Common Plants, for Field and Garden Practice. Price 2s.

THE HAND-BOOK OF AGRICULTURE;
Chiefly for the use of those interested in the Allotment System. Price 1s. 6d.

THE HAND-BOOK OF COOKERY;
Intended for the use of the Middle Classes. Price 2s. cloth.

THE HAND-BOOK OF CHEMISTRY; WITH A COMPLETE INDEX OF REFERENCE.

BY G. H. CAUNTER.

Price 2s. 6d. cloth.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE CULTIVATION OF THE DAHLIA.

BY J. PAXTON, F.L.S., F.R.H.
Editor of the Magazine of Botany, and Gardener and Forester to the Duke of Devonshire, Chatsworth.

Price 1s. 6d. cloth, in Monthly Numbers, price 6d., and in Yearly Volumes, price 5s. 6d.

THE MAGAZINE OF DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

This Magazine has now become a standard work, and will be found a most valuable family book. Any volume may be had bound in cloth, price 6s. 6d.

London: Published by W. S. O'NEILL and CO.; and W. and R. CHAMBERS, Edinburgh.
CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

The thoughts of worldly men are for ever regulated by a moral law of gravitation, which, like the physical one, holds them down to earth. The bright glory of day, and the silent wonders of a starlit night, appeal to their minds in vain. There are no signs in the sun, or in the moon, or in the stars, for their reading. They are like some wise men, who, learning to know each planet by its Latin name, have quite forgotten such small heavenly constellations as Charity, Forbearance, Universal Love, and Mercy, although they shine by night and day so brightly that the blind may see them; and who, looking upward at the spangled sky, see nothing there but the reflection of their own great wisdom and book-learning.

It is curious to imagine these people of the world, busy in thought, turning their eyes toward the countless spheres that shine above us, and making them reflect the only images their minds contain. The man who lives but in the breath of princes, has nothing in his sight but stars for courtiers’ breasts. The envious man beholds his neighbours’ honours even in the sky; to the money-hoarder, and the mass of worldly folk, the whole great universe above glitters with sterling coin—fresh from the mint—stamped with the sovereign’s head—coming always between them and heaven, turn where they may. So do the shadows of our own desires stand between us and our better angels, and thus their brightness is eclipsed.

Everything was fresh and gay, as though the world were but that morning made, when Mr. Chester rode at a tranquil pace along the Forest road. Though early in the season, it was warm and genial weather; the trees were budding into leaf, the hedges and the grass were green, the air was musical with songs of birds, and high above them all the lark poured out her richest melody. In shady spots, the morning dew sparkled on each young leaf and blade of grass; and where the sun was shining, some diamond drops yet glistened brightly, as in unwillingness to leave so fair a world, and have such brief existence. Even the light wind, whose rustling was as gentle to the ear as softly-falling water, had its hope and promise; and, leaving a pleasant fragrance in its track as it went fluttering by, whispered of its intercourse with Summer, and of his happy coming.

The solitary rider went glancing on among the trees, from sunlight into shade and back again, at the same even pace—looking about him, certainly, from time to time, but with no greater thought of the day or the scene through which he moved, than that he was fortunate (being choicely dressed) to have such favourable weather. He smiled very complacently at such times, but rather as if he were satisfied with himself than with anything else; and so went riding on, upon his chestnut cob, as pleasant to look upon as his own horse, and probably far less sensitive to the many cheerful influences by which he was surrounded.

In course of time, the Maypole's massive chimneys rose upon his view: but he quickened not his pace one jot, and with the same cool gravity rode up to the tavern porch. John Willet, who was toasting his red face before a great fire in the bar, and who, with surpassing foresight and quickness of apprehension, had been thinking, as he looked at the blue sky, that if that state of things lasted much longer, it might ultimately become necessary to leave off fires and throw the windows open, issued forth to hold his stirrup; calling lustily for Hugh.

"Oh, you're here, are you, sir?" said John, rather surprised by the quickness with which he appeared. "Take this here valuable animal into the stable, and have more than particular care of him if you want to keep your place. A mortal lazy fellow, sir; he needs a deal of looking after."

"But you have a son," returned Mr. Chester, giving his bridle to Hugh as he dismounted, and acknowledging his salute by a careless motion of his hand towards his hat. "Why don't you make him useful?"

"Why, the truth is, sir," replied John with great importance, "that my son—what, you're listening are you, villain?"

"Who's listening?" returned Hugh angrily. "A treat, indeed, to hear you speak! Would you have me take him in till he's cool?"

"Walk him up and down further off then, sir," cried old John, "and when you see me and a noble gentleman entertaining ourselves with talk, keep your distance. If you don't know your distance, sir," added Mr. Willet, after an enormously long pause, during which he fixed his great dull eyes on Hugh, and waited with exemplary patience for any little property in the way of ideas that might be coming to him, "we'll find a way to teach you, pretty soon."

Hugh shrugged his shoulders scornfully, and in his reckless swaggering way, crossed to the other side of the little green, and there, with the bridle slung loosely over his shoulder, led the horse to and fro, glancing at his master now and then from under his bushy eyebrows, with as sinister an aspect as one would desire to see.

Mr. Chester, who, without appearing to do so, had eyed him attentively during this brief dispute, stepped into the porch, and turning abruptly to Mr. Willet, said,

"You keep strange servants, John."

"Strange enough to look at sir, certainly," answered the host; "but out of doors; for horses, dogs, and the like of that; there ain't a better man in England than is that Maypole Hugh yonder. He ain't fit for indoors," added Mr. Willet, with the confidential air of a man who felt his own superior nature, "I do that; but if that chap had only a little imagination, sir—"
"He's an active fellow now, I dare swear," said Mr. Chester, in a musing tone, which seemed to suggest that he would have said the same had there been nobody to hear him.

"Active, sir!" retorted John, with quite an expression in his face: "that chap! Hallo, there! You, sir! Bring that horse here, and go and hang my wig on the weathercock, to show this gentleman whether you're one of the lively sort or not."

Hugh made no answer, but throwing the bridle to his master, and snatching his wig from his head, in a manner so unceremonious and hasty that the action discomposed Mr. Willet not a little, though performed at his own special desire, climbed nimbly to the very summit of the maypole before the house, and hanging the wig upon the weathercock, sent it twirling round like a roasting jack. Having achieved this performance, he cast it on the ground, and sliding down the pole with inconceivable rapidity, alighted on his feet almost as soon as it had touched the earth.

"There, sir," said John, relapsing into his usual stolid state, "you won't see that at many houses, besides the Maypole, where there's good accommodation for man and beast—nor that neither, though that with him is nothing."

This last remark bore reference to his vaulting on horseback, as upon Mr. Chester's first visit, and quickly disappearing by the stable gate.

"That with him is nothing," repeated Mr. Willet, brushing his wig with his wrist, and inwardly resolving to distribute a small charge for dust and damage to that article of dress, through the various items of his guest's bill; "he'll get out of almost any window in the house. There never was such a chap for flinging himself about and never hurting his bones. It's my opinion, sir, that it's pretty nearly all owing to his not having any imagination; and that if imagination could be (which it can't) knocked into him, he'd never be able to do it any more. But we was a talking, sir, about my son."

"True, Willet, true," said his visitor, turning again towards the landlord with his accustomed serenity of face. "My good friend, what about him?"

It has been reported that Mr. Willet, previously to making answer, winked. But as he never was known to be guilty of such lightness of conduct either before or afterwards, this may be looked upon as a malicious invention of his enemies—founded, perhaps, upon the undisputed circumstances of his taking his guest by the third breast button of his coat, counting downwards from the chin, and pouring his reply into his ear:

"Sir," whispered John, with dignity, "I know my duty. We want no love-making here, sir, unknown to parents. I respect a certain young gentleman, taking him in the light of a young gentleman; I respect a certain young lady, taking her in the light of a young lady; but of the two as a couple, I have no knowledge, sir, none whatever. My son, sir, is upon his patrole."

"I thought I saw him looking through the corner window but this moment," said Mr. Chester, who naturally thought that being on patrole, implied walking about somewhere.
No doubt you did, sir," returned John. "He is upon his patrole of honour, sir, not to leave the premises. Me and some friends of mine that use the Maypole of an evening, sir, considered what was best to be done with him, to prevent his doing anything unpleasant in opposing your desires; and we've put him on his patrole. And what's more, sir, he won't be off his patrole for a pretty long time to come, I can tell you that."

When he had communicated this bright idea, which had had its origin in the perusal by the village cronies of a newspaper, containing, among other matters, an account of how some officer pending the sentence of some court-martial had been enlarged on parole, Mr. Willet drew back from his guest's ear, and without any visible alteration of feature, chuckled thrice audibly. This nearest approach to a laugh in which he ever indulged (and that but seldom and only on extreme occasions), never even curled his lip or effected the smallest change—no, not so much as a slight wagging of—his great, fat, double chin, which at these times, as at all others, remained a perfect desert in the broad map of his face; one changeless, dull, tremendous blank.

Lest it should be matter of surprise to any, that Mr. Willet adopted this bold course in opposition to one whom he had often entertained, and who had always paid his way at the Maypole gallantly, it may be remarked that it was his very penetration and sagacity in this respect, which occasioned him to indulge in those unusual demonstrations of jocularity, just now recorded. For Mr. Willet, after carefully balancing father and son in his mental scales, had arrived at the distinct conclusion that the old gentleman was a better sort of customer than the young one. Throwing his landlord into the same scale, which was already turned by this consideration, and heaping upon him, again, his strong desires to run counter to the unfortunate Joe, and his opposition as a general principle to all matters of love and matrimony, it went down to the very ground straightway, and sent the light cause of the younger gentleman flying upwards to the ceiling. Mr. Chester was not the kind of man to be by any means dim-sighted to Mr. Willet's motives, but he thanked him as graciously as if he had been one of the most disinterested martyrs that ever shone on earth; and leaving him, with many complimentary reliances on his great taste and judgment, to prepare whatever dinner he might deem most fitting the occasion, bent his steps towards the Warren.

Dressed with more than his usual elegance; assuming a gracefulness of manner, which, though it was the result of long study, sat easily upon him and became him well; composing his features into their most serene and possessing expression; and setting in short that guard upon himself, at every point, which denoted that he attached no slight importance to the impression he was about to make; he entered the bounds of Miss Haredale's usual walk. He had not gone far, or looked about him long, when he descried coming towards him, a female figure. A glimpse of the form and dress as she crossed a little wooden bridge which lay between them, satisfied him that he had found her whom he desired to see. He threw himself in her way, and a very few paces brought them close together.

He raised his hat from his head, and yielding the path, suffered her to pass him. Then, as if the idea had but that moment occurred to him, he turned hastily back and said in an agitated voice:

"I beg pardon—do I address Miss Haredale?"

She stopped in some confusion at being so unexpectedly accosted by a stranger; and answered "Yes."

"Something told me," he said, looking a compliment to her beauty, "that it could be no other. Miss Haredale, I bear a name which is not unknown to you—which it is a pride, and yet a pain to me to know, sounds pleasantly in your ears. I am a man advanced in life, as you see. I am the father of him whom you honour and distinguish above all other men. May I for weighty reasons which fill me with distress, beg but a minute's conversation with you here?"

Who that was inexperienced in deceit, and had a frank and youthful heart, could doubt the speaker's truth—could doubt it too, when the voice that spoke, was like the faint echo of one she knew so well, and so much loved to hear? She inclined her head, and stopping, cast her eyes upon the ground.

"A little more apart—among these trees. It is an old man's hand, Miss Haredale; an honest one, believe me."

She put hers in it as he said these words, and suffered him to lead her to a neighbouring seat.
"You alarm me, sir," she said in a low voice. "You are not the bearer of any ill news, I hope?"

"Of none that you anticipate," he answered, sitting down beside her. "Edward is well—quite well. It is of him I wish to speak, certainly; but I have no misfortune to communicate."

She bowed her head again, and made as though she would have begged him to proceed; but said nothing.

"I am sensible that I speak to you at a disadvantage, dear Miss Haredale. Believe me that I am not so forgetful of the feelings of my younger days as not to know that you are little disposed to view me with favour. You have heard me described as cold-hearted, calculating, selfish—"

"I have never, sir"—she interposed with an altered manner and a firmer voice; "I have never heard you spoken of in harsh or disrespectful terms. You do a great wrong to Edward's nature if you believe him capable of any mean or base proceeding."

"Pardon me, my sweet young lady, but your uncle—"

"Nor is it my uncle's nature either," she replied, with a heightened colour in her cheek. "It is not his nature to stab in the dark, nor is it mine to love such deeds."

She rose as she spoke, and would have left him; but he detained her with a gentle hand, and besought her in such persuasive accents to hear him but another minute, that she was easily prevailed upon to comply, and so sat down again.

"And it is," said Mr. Chester, looking upward, and apostrophising the air; "it is this frank, ingenuous, noble nature, Ned, that you can wound so lightly. Shame—shame upon you, boy!"

She turned towards him quickly, and with a scornful look and flashing eyes. There were tears in Mr. Chester's, but he dashed them hurrily away, as though unwilling that his weakness should be known, and regarded her with mingled admiration and compassion.

"I never until now," he said, "believed, that the frivolous actions of a young man could move me like these of my own son. I never knew till now, the worth of a woman's heart, which boys so lightly win, and lightly fling away. Trust me, dear young lady, that I never until now did know your worth; and though an abhorrence of deceit and falsehood has impelled me to seek you out, and would have done so had you been the poorest and least gifted of your sex, I should have lacked the fortitude to sustain this interview could I have pictured you to my imagination as you really are."

Oh! If Mrs. Varden could have seen the virtuous gentleman as he said these words, with indignation sparkling from his eyes—if she could have heard his broken, quavering voice—if she could have beheld him as he stood bare-headed in the sunlight, and with unwonted energy poured forth his eloquence!

With a haughty face, but pale and trembling too, Emma regarded him in silence. She neither spoke nor moved, but gazed upon him as though she would look into his heart.

"I throw off," said Mr. Chester, "the restraint which natural affection would impose on some men, and reject all bonds but those of truth and duty Miss Haredale, you are deceived; you are deceived by your unworthy lover, and my unworthy son."

Still she looked at him steadily, and still said not one word.

"I have ever opposed his professions of love for you; you will do me the justice, dear Miss Haredale, to remember that. Your uncle and myself were enemies in early life, and if I had sought retaliation, I might have found it here. But as we grow older, we grow wiser—better, I would fain hope—and from the first, I have opposed him in this attempt. I foresaw the end, and would have spared you, if I could."

"Speak plainly, sir," she faltered. "You deceive me, or are deceived yourself. I do not believe you—I cannot—I should not."

"First," said Mr. Chester, soothingly, "for there may be in your mind some latent angry feeling to which I would not appeal, pray take this letter. It reached my hands by chance, and by mistake, and should have accounted to you (as I am told) for my son's not answering some other note of yours. God forbid, Miss Haredale," said the good gentleman, with great emotion, "that there should be in your gentle breast one causeless ground of quarrel with him. You should know, and you will see, that he was in no fault here."

There appeared something so very candid, so scrupulously honourable, so very truthful and just in this course—something which rendered the upright person who resorted to it, so worthy of belief—that Emma's heart, for the first time, sunk within her. She turned away, and burst into tears.

"I would," said Mr. Chester, leaning over her, and speaking in mild and quite venerable accents; "I would, dear girl, it were my task to banish, not increase, those tokens of your grief. My son, my erring son,—I will not call him deliberately criminal in this, for men so young, who have been inconstant twice or thrice before, act without reflection, almost without a knowledge of the wrong they do,—will break his plighted faith to you; has broken it even now. Shall I stop here, and having given you this warning, leave it to be fulfilled; or shall I go on?"—

"You will go on, sir," she answered, "and speak more plainly yet, in justice both to him and me."

"My dear girl," said Mr. Chester, bending over her more affectionately still; "whom I would call my daughter, but the fates forbid, Edward seeks to break with you upon a false and most unwarrantable pretence. I have it on his own showing; in his own hand. Forgive me, if I have had a watch upon his conduct; I am his father; I had a regard for your peace and his honour, and no better resource was left me. There lies on his desk at this moment, ready for transmission to you, a letter, in which he tells you that our poverty—forbids him to pursue his claim upon your hand; in which he offers, voluntarily proposes, to free you from your pledge; and talks magnanimously (men do so, very commonly, in such cases) of being in time more worthy your regard—and so forth. A letter, to be plain, in which he not only jilts you—pardon the word; I would summon to your aid your pride and dignity—not only jilts you, I fear, in favour of the object whose slighting treatment first inspired his brief passion for yourself and gave it birth in wounded vanity, but affects to make a merit and a virtue of the act."

She glanced proudly at him once more, as by an involuntary impulse, and with a swelling breast rejoined, "If what you say be true, he takes much needless trouble, sir, to compass his design. He is very tender of my peace of mind. I quite thank him."

"The truth of what I tell you, dear young lady," he replied, "you will test by the receipt or non-receipt of the letter of which I speak.—Haredale, my dear fellow, I am delighted to see you, although we meet under singular circumstances, and upon a melancholy occasion. I hope you are very well."

At these words the young lady raised her eyes, which were filled with tears; and seeing that her uncle indeed stood before them, and being quite unequal to the trial of hearing or of speaking one word more, hurriedly withdrew, and left them. They stood looking at each other, and at her retreating figure, and for a long time neither of them spoke.

"What does this mean? Explain it," said Mr. Haredale at length. "Why are you here, and why with her?"

"My dear friend," rejoined the other, resuming his accustomed manner with infinite readiness, and throwing himself upon the bench with a weary air, "you told me not very long ago, at that delightful old tavern of which you are the esteemed proprietor (and a most charming establishment it is for persons of rural pursuits and in robust health, who are not liable to take cold), that I had the head and heart of an evil spirit in all matters of deception. I thought at the time; I really did think; you flattered me. But now I begin to wonder at your discernment, and vanity apart, do honestly believe you spoke the truth. Did you ever counterfeit extreme ingenuity and honest indignation? My dear fellow, you have no conception if you never did, how faint the effort makes one."

Mr. Haredale surveyed him with a look of cold contempt. "You may evade an explanation, I know," he said, folding his arms. "But I must have it. I can wait."

"Not at all. Not at all, my good fellow. You shall not wait a moment," returned his friend, as he lazily crossed his legs. "The simplest thing in the world. It lies in a nutshell. Nel has written her letter—a boyish, honest, sentimental composition, which remains as yet in his desk, because he hasn't had the heart to send it. I have taken a liberty, for which my parental affection and anxiety are a sufficient excuse, and possessed myself of the contents. I have described them to your niece (a most enchanting person, Haredale; quite an angelic creature), with a little colouring and description adapted to our purpose. It's done. You may be quite easy. It's all over. Deprived of their adherents and mediators; her pride and jealousy roused to the utmost; with nobody to undeceive her, and you to confirm me; you will find that their intercourse will close with her answer. If she receives Ned's letter by to-morrow noon, you may date their parting from to-morrow night. No thanks I beg; you owe me none. I have acted for myself; and if I have forwarded our compact with all the ardour even you could have desired, I have done so selfishly, indeed."
"I curse the compact, as you call it, with my whole heart and soul," returned the other. "It was made in an evil hour. I have bound myself to a lie; I have leagued myself with you; and though I did so with a righteous motive, and though it cost me such an effort as haply few men know, I hate and despise myself for the deed."

"You are very warm," said Mr. Chester with a languid smile.

"I am warm. I am maddened by your coldness. 'Death, Chester, if your blood ran warmer in your veins, and there were no restraints upon me, such as those that hold and drag me back—well; it is done; you tell me so, and on such a point I may believe you. When I am most remorseful for this treachery, I will think of you and your marriage, and try to justify myself in such remembrances, for having torn asunder Emma and your son, at any cost. Our bond is cancelled now, and we may part."

Mr. Chester kissed his hand gracefully; and with the same tranquil face he had preserved throughout—even when he had seen his companion so tortured and transported by his passion that his whole frame was shaken—lay in his lounging posture on the seat and watched him as he walked away.

"My scape-goat and my drudge at school," he said, raising his head to look after him; "my friend of later days, who could not keep his mistress when he had won her, and throw me in her way to carry off the prize; I triumph in the present and the past. Bark on, ill-favoured ill-conditioned cur; fortune has ever been with me—I like to hear you."

The spot where they had met, was in an avenue of trees. Mr. Haredale not passing out on either hand, had walked straight on. He chanced to turn his head when at some considerable distance, and seeing that his late companion had by that time risen and was looking after him, stood still as though he half expected him to follow, and waited for his coming up.

"It may come to that one day, but not yet," said Mr. Chester, waving his hand, as though they were the best of friends, and turning away. "Not yet, Haredale. Life is pleasant enough to me; dull and full of heaviness to you. No. To cross swords with such a man—to indulge his humour unless upon extremity—would be weak indeed."

For all that, he drew his sword as he walked along, and in an absent humour ran his eye from hilt to point full twenty times. But thoughtfulness begets wrinkles; remembering this, he soon put it up, smoothed his contracted brow, hummed a gay tune with greater gaiety of manner, and was his unruffled self again.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

A HOMELY proverb recognises the existence of a troublesome class of persons who, having an inch conceded them, will take an ell. Not to quote the illustrious examples of those heroic scourges of mankind, whose amiable path in life has been from birth to death through blood, and fire, and ruin, and who would seem to have existed for no better purpose than to teach mankind that as the absence of pain is pleasure, so the earth, purged of their presence, may be deemed a blessed place—not to quote such mighty instances, it will be sufficient to refer to old John Willet.

Old John having long encroached a good standard inch, full measure, on the liberty of Joe, and having snipped off a Flemish ell in the matter of the parole, grew so despotic and so great, that his thirst for conquest knew no bounds. The more young Joe submitted, the more absolute old John became. The ell soon faded into nothing. Yards, furlongs, miles, arose; and on went old John in the pleasantest manner possible, trimming off an exuberance in this place, shearing away some liberty of speech or action in that, and conducting himself in his small way with as much high mightiness and majesty, as the most glorious tyrant that ever had his statue reared in the public ways, of ancient or of modern times.

As great men are urged on to the abuse of power (when they need urging, which is not often), by their flatterers and dependents, so old John was impelled to these exercises of authority by the applause and admiration of his Maypole cronies, who, in the intervals of their nightly pipes and pots, would shake their heads and say that Mr. Willet was a father of the good old English sort; that there were no new-fangled notions or modern ways in him; that he put them in mind of what their fathers were when they were boys; that there was no mistake about him; that it would be well for the country if there were more like him, and more was the pity that there were not; with many other original remarks of that nature. Then they would condescendingly give Joe to understand that it was all for his good, and he would be thankful for it one day; and in particular, Mr. Cobb would acquaint him, that when he was his age, his father thought no more of giving him a parental kick, or a box on the ears, or a cuff on the head, or some little admonition of that sort, than he did of any other ordinary duty of life; and he would further remark, with looks of great significance, that but for this judicious bringing up, he might have never been the man he was at that present speaking; which was probable enough, as he was, beyond all question, the dullest dog of the party. In short, between old John and old John's friends, there never was an unfortunate young fellow so bullied, badgered, worried, fretted, and brow-beaten; so constantly beset, or made so tired of his life, as poor Joe Willet.

This had come to be the recognised and established state of things; but as John was very anxious to flourish his supremacy before the eyes of Mr. Chester, he did that day exceed himself, and did so goad and chafe his son and heir, that but for Joe's having made a solemn vow to keep his hands in his pockets when they were not otherwise engaged, it is impossible to say what he might have done with them. But the longest day has an end, and at length Mr. Chester came down stairs to mount his horse, which was ready at the door. As old John was not in the way at the moment, Joe, who was sitting in the bar ruminating on his dismal fate and the manifold perfections of Dolly Varden, ran out to hold the guest's stirrup and assist him to mount. Mr. Chester was scarcely in the saddle, and Joe was in the very act of making him a graceful bow, when old John came diving out of the porch, and collared him.

"None of that, sir," said John, "none of that, sir. No breaking of patroles.
How dare you come out of the door, sir, without leave? You're trying to get away, sir, are you, and to make a traitor of yourself again? What do you mean, sir?"

"Let me go, father," said Joe, imploringly, as he marked the smile upon their visitor's face, and observed the pleasure his disgrace afforded him. "This is too bad. Who wants to get away!"

"Who wants to get away!" cried John, shaking him. "Why do you, sir, you do. You're the boy, sir," added John, collaring with one hand, and aiding the effect of a farewell bow to the visitor with the other, "that wants to sneak into houses, and stir up differences between noble gentlemen and their sons, are you, eh? Hold your tongue, sir."

Joe made no effort to reply. It was the crowning circumstance of his degradation. He extricated himself from his father's grasp, darted an angry look at the departing guest, and returned into the house.

"But for her," thought Joe, as he threw his arms upon a table in the common room, and laid his head upon them, "but for Dolly, who I couldn't bear should think me the rascal they would make me out to be if I ran away, this house and I should part to-night."

It being evening by this time, Solomon Daisy, Tom Cobb, and Long Parkes, were all in the common room too, and had from the window been witnesses of what had just occurred. Mr. Willet joining them soon afterwards, received the compliments of the company with great composure, and lighting his pipe, sat down among them.

"We'll see, gentlemen," said John, after a long pause, "who's the master of this house, and who isn't. We'll see whether boys are to govern men, or men are to govern boys."
"And quite right too," assented Solomon Daisy with some approving nods;
"quite right, Johnny. Very good, Johnny. Well said, Mr. Willet. Bravo, sir."
John slowly brought his eyes to bear upon him, looked at him for a long time, and finally made answer, to the unspeakable consternation of his hearers, "When I want encouragement from you, sir, I'll ask you for it. You let me alone, sir.
I can get on without you, I hope. Don't you tackle me, sir, if you please."
"Don't take it ill, Johnny; I didn't mean any harm," pleaded the little man.
"Very good, sir," said John, more than usually obstinate after his late success.
"Never mind, sir. I can stand pretty firm of myself, sir, I believe, without being shored up by you." And having given utterance to this retort, Mr.
Willet fixed his eyes upon the boiler, and fell into a kind of tobacco-trance.

The spirits of the company being somewhat damped by this embarrassing line of conduct on the part of their host, nothing more was said for a long time; but at length Mr. Cobb took upon himself to remark, as he rose to knock the ashes out of his pipe, that he hoped Joe would henceforth learn to obey his father in all things; that he had found, that day, he was not one of the sort of men who were to be trifled with; and that he would recommend him, poetically speaking, to mind his eye for the future.
"I'd recommend you, in return," said Joe, looking up with a flushed face,
"not to talk to me."
"Hold your tongue, sir," cried Mr. Willet, suddenly rousing himself, and turning round.
"I won't, father," cried Joe, smiting the table with his fist, so that the jugs and glasses rung again; "these things are hard enough to bear from you;
from anybody else I never will endure them any more. Therefore I say, Mr.
Cobb, don't talk to me."
"Why, who are you," said Mr. Cobb, sneeringly, "that you're not to be talked to, eh, Joe?"
To which Joe returned no answer, but with a very ominous shake of the head, resumed his old position, which he would have peacefully preserved until the house shut up at night, but that Mr. Cobb, stimulated by the wonder of the company at the young man's presumption, retorted with sundry taunts, which proved too much for flesh and blood to bear. Crowding into one moment the vexation and the wrath of years, Joe started up, overturned the table, fell upon his long enemy, pummelled him with all his might and main, and finished by driving him with surprising swiftness against a heap of spitoons in one corner; plunging into which, head foremost, with a tremendous crash, he lay at full length among the ruins, stunned and motionless. Then, without waiting to receive the compliments of the bystanders on the victory he had won, he retreated to his own bedchamber, and considering himself in a state of siege, piled all the portable furniture against the door by way of barricade.
"I have done it now," said Joe, as he sat down upon his bedstead and wiped his heated face. "I knew it would come at last. The Maypole and I must part company. I'm a roving vagabond—she hates me forevermore—it's all over!"
ADVERTISEMENTS.

THO. HARRIS AND SONS.

The most powerful ever made, price 5s. 6d.
Patronised by the Royal Family and the elite of Her Majesty’s Theatre.

NEW DOUBLET TRUMPET CLASS.

PRINCE ALBERT.

RIDING WHIPS, from Five Shillings to Ten

Gentlemen, at W. & J. SANGSTER, 140, Regent Street, and 94, Fleet Street—Innovations.

MANUFACTURERS TO

His Royal Highness

ROYAL VICTORIA WORKS, Graham-street, Birmingham.

Clerkenwell-green, and

Patronised by the Royal

Penton-street.

SARSAPARILLA—The CONCENTRATED ESSENCE OF SARSAPARILLA.

New or ditto, ditto, ditto. Which, being, Perch and Roach Rods, breadth of the containing Angle... is distributed, any article exchanged if lower than ever.

Whoare! supplied.

A PLAIN GUIDE TO THE HOLY COMMUNION.

Also, by the same Author.

NEW SONGS. “The Alpine Shepherdess,” by F. L. JACQUES, with a magnificent success by Miss Adeline Cooper, beautifully illustrated, no., “The Old Waterfall,” by RICHARD. This admirable song is by the composer of “Woodland space that Tunes,” of which 10,000 copies have already been sold. “The Vale of Waters,” by N. S. GILBERT, sung by Miss Dool and Miss Bird, and composed by young PARRY, Jun., London, 6d. each. Pittock’s, 5, Southwark Street, and 25, Strand.

PLUTES—Eight-keyed COCOA FLUTES, with patent head, double springs, plates to the C keys, 9s., 6d. each. The best article, 9d. The most elegant a set of instruments are made of the choicest wood, finished with great care, and warranted perfect in every respect. See the PATENT, Toss-end of the Fleet, 17, Northumberland street, Strand.

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING CREAM, published by France ASHBY—This remarkableCombinationof Creams includes all the good qualities of the finest Staples Soap, while from that article in the composition, and from the keen and sharp appearance, promises a cream of a superior kind. It does not dry on the face, and smears in the delightful flavour of the almonds. Invented and prepared by the celebrated SHAVINGSHOPPEPERS.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO. successors to Price and Gosnell, at the court, Lombard-street. Proprietors of PRINCE ALBERT'S HOU, heat, 21, Market Street, Hull, price-graded by E. TENTUM, Toss-end of the Fleet, 17, Northumberland street, Strand.

A. JOHNSTON & CO., 4, MODERATE STREET, CITY.

(Two doors from the Bank of England.)

TO FAMILIES, of every description.

A. Johnston & Co. beg to offer the following low-priced list.

PATENT DISH COVERS as especially worthy of attention.

Patent Silver Pattern Dish Covers, in Sets of 6, 7s. 6d.; with Shell handles, 7s. 6d. Patent Imperial ditto, dito, 9s. 6d.; with Shell handles, 10s. 6d. A Second Quality in either of the above, in Sets of 6, 6s. 6d.—These Covers are warranted as the best of the London make. Also, Improved Portable Shower Baths, with brass hose pumps and complete complete, warranted, 26d., Improved Warm Baths with Furnaces, 2d. with Shower Bath, attached, comprising one, either a Warm, Cold, or Shower Bath. Cold and Banging Baths, Children’s Bath, Nursery Baths, &c.—Granger Engines, Water Pots, &c. in great variety.

Agents for Patent Economic Hot-Oil Lamps, 6d., and Furnishing Ironmongers generally.

ADVERT!

EDWARD LACEY begs to announce, that he has purchased, on most advantageous Terms, for Cash, the entire remaining STOCKS of the following useful and elegant Works; and, in order to promote their rapid sale, has fixed the following Low Prices in some cases One Fourth what they were Published at, as will place them within the reach of all lovers of Literature and the Fine Arts. The whole of the Books are guaranteed complete, perfect, and with the finest impressions of the Plates. In the binding particular regard has been paid to strength and durability, as well as taste and ornamentation, with numerous beautiful Steel Plates of the most eminent Engravers; and a delightful source of mental enjoyment, as well as a Compendium for the Student and Drawing-room Table, and a most acceptable present for female friends.

1. I have a song of war for knight:
   Fairy tale to tell the list;
   Cozín grimm the marks to read.

2. THE DRAWING-ROOM ALBUM, large 4to, illustrated with Forty Beautiful Steel Engravings, and bound in a handsome embossed pattern, full gilt, and embellished. It is edited by CHARLES CECIL, a first-rate literary work, in addition to its being an elegant and tasteful Book of Plates for the most exacting Antiquary and Master, and a delightful source of mental enjoyment, as well as a Compendium for the Student and Drawing-room Table, and a most acceptable present for female friends.

3. From the large number purchased, E. Lacey has great pleasure in being able to offer this splendid Work at only 1s. per copy.

4. RUSIA! ILLUSTRATED, in a Series of beautiful line Engravings, by the first Artists, after Drawings by YCKERS, the intellectual and decorative part by LEWIS GILBERT, the Engraver of "Indiia Illustrata," in one large and handsome volume, elegantly bound and gilt, now offered at only 1s. 6d.

5. THE GALLERY OF BRITISH ART, dedicated to the President and Council of the Royal Academy. This beautiful Book contains the most splendid Engravings on Steel, from admired Drawings by Twenty-five different eminent Painters; and the few remaining copies are now offered, at only 1s. 6d.

6. INDIA! ILLUSTRATED, in a Series of Historical and Descriptive Account of this important and interesting Country, from personal experience of the Subject, and with numerous beautiful Steel Plates by the most eminent Engravers, after Pictures by J. W. DAVIES, Esq., R.A., handsomely bound, red leather, gilt, etc., in an elegant green embossed binding, chaussé gilt and de. etc. in an elegant green embossed binding, chaussé gilt and de.

7. NEW HAND-BOOK TO THE RHINE, GERMANY, HOLLAND, FRANCE, FRANCE, FRANCE, edited by Mr. L. TAYLOR, handsomely bound, red leather, gilt, etc., in a handsome green embossed binding, chaussé gilt and de. etc. in an elegant green embossed binding, chaussé gilt and de.

8. SCENERY OF LONDON and its NEIGHBOURHOOD, detailed in a Series of Forty Beautiful Steel Engravings, from Drawings made on the Spot, by M. R. and G. R. BAKER, CLARK, and others, and produced at a great expense by the Gravelton and Pillin Engraving Establishment. It is edited by W. G. FRAENKEL, Esq., forming altogether a most handsome and complete, clear, and vivid display of green and gold. The few copies left are now offered at only 1s. 6d.

9. PARIS and its ENVIRONS, 4to, in a Series of Two Hundred and Four Picturesque Views, beautifully embellished with Forty Beautiful Steel Engravings, from Drawings on Steel, by CHARLES HEATH and others, with Descriptions both in English and French, with handsome cloth, gilt and embossed, only 1s. 6d., lately published at 5s. 14d.

10. THE GALLERY OF MODERN BRITISH ARTISTS, consisting of a Series of Engravings, from the Works of the most eminent Painters of the day; including TENN: ROBERTS, HAM- YEN, CRANE, DAVIES, W. TAYLOR, ANDERSON, BROWN, HATTON, LUMBY, and others, beautifully bound, red leather, gilt and embossed, only 1s. 6d., lately published at 2s. 6d.

A General Catalogue of Superior Books, and the best Juvenile Works, at the Reduced Prices, may be had Gratia, on application (or by pre-paid letter, including two penny stamps) to:

EDWARD LACEY, WHOLESALE BOOKSELLER, 76, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.