1841

Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 67

Charles Dickens

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge

Recommended Citation
MASTER
GUMMREY'S
CLOCK
BY "BOZ."

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1841.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATERMOLE & H. R. BROWN.

BARNABY RUDGE.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND;

J. MURDOCH, Edinburgh; J. FINLAY & Co., Glascow; L. SMITH, Aberdeen; S. J. MACKEN, Dublin; SOMER & DUNHAM, Manchester;

WALKER & WARD, Liverpool; WOODFORD & WARD, Birmingham; S. SMITH & Son, Bath; LIGHT & RIDLEY, Bristol;

T. N. MOORE & SON, Bristol; H. & S. KINGSLEY, Brighton; G. THOMAS, Bury; E. JOHNSON, Cambridge; C. THOMAS, Carlisle;

J. E. CHADWICK, Liverpool; ELY & DIXON, Cheltenham; W. EDMONDSON, Conway; W. EDMONDSON, Derby;

W. BAXTER, Derby; T. WHITTON, Devonport; W. T. BROWN, Exeter; T. BAYNES, Gloucester; H. CUMIN, Hull;

H. H. R. BROWN, Ipswich; W. BAXTER, Lichfield; T. HARRISON, Leeds; J. B. DRURY, Maidstone;

F. BAYNES & SON, Newmarket; T. W. BAYNES, Norwich; J. W. WASHINGTON, Norwich; W. BAXTER, Nottingham;

H. SLATTON, Oxford; F. EDMUNDSON, Perth; R. NALLTON, Plymouth; G. LINDSAY, Reading; BEECH & CO., Salisbury;

J. N. GOOD, Shrewsbury; J. W. BEECH, Shrewsbury; W. BAXTER, Southport; C. BAYNES, Taunton;

J. N. GOOD, Taunton; J. BAXTER, Winchester; W. BAXTER, York; J. R. BROWN, London; and sold by all

Booksellers and Newsagents.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS.

In three volumes, post octavo, price 25s. cloth,

OLIVER TWIST.
WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY THE AUTHOR.

Each in One Volume octavo, price bound in cloth, 1l. 1s.; half-bound morocco, 1l. 4s. 6d.; whole-bound morocco, gilt, 1l. 6s. 6d.

THE ADVENTURES OF NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.
AND A PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR, ENGRAVED BY FINDEN, FROM A PAINTING BY D. MACLISE, A.R.A.

THE PICKWICK PAPERS.
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY PHIZ.

SKETCHES BY "BOZ."
WITH FORTY-THREE ILLUSTRATIONS BY "PHIZ."

WRITTEN CARICATURES;

A SKETCH OF PERIPATETIC PHILOSOPHY.
FROM HINTS IN THE PARIS CARICATURE.

WITH FORTY-FOUR ILLUSTRATIONS, BY J. LEECH.
"Humorously written, and capital illustrated. There is much quaint, quiet, undeniable fun in this little book." — Sunday Times.

In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards,

SKETCHES OF YOUNG COUPLES.
WITH SIX ILLUSTRATIONS BY "PHIZ."

EIGHTH EDITION. In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards, SKETCHES OF YOUNG LADIES.

WITH SIX ILLUSTRATIONS BY "PHIZ."

FIFTH EDITION. In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards, SKETCHES OF YOUNG GENTLEMEN.

WITH SIX ILLUSTRATIONS BY "PHIZ."

THE HAND-BOOK OF SWINDLING.

POCKET TRAVELLING MAPS,
WITH ALL THE RAILWAYS CORRECTLY Laid down, as far as they at present extend.

MAPS OF THE ENGLISH COUNTIES.
ENGRAVED BY SIDNEY HALL.
WITH THE MAIL AND COACH ROADS CORRECTLY COLOURED.

Mounting in Cases adapted to the Waistcoat Pocket, 1s. 6d. each,

Price Two Shillings, double the size of the above,

YORKSHIRE, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES.

COMPLETE SETS OF THE ABOVE, UNIFORMLY MOUNTED AND LETTERED, IN A NEAT CASE, MAY BE HAD, PRICE FOUR GUINEAS.

A New Edition, with all the New Lines of Railroad correctly laid down, price 4s. mounted in a case,

A MAP OF THE INLAND COMMUNICATION,
SHOWING THE COURSE OF ALL THE CANALS, RAILROADS, AND NAVIGABLE RIVERS IN ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 106, STRAND.
CHAPTER THE FORTY-FIRST.

From the workshop of the Golden Key, there issued forth a tinkling sound, so merry and good-humoured, that it suggested the idea of some one working blithely, and made quite pleasant music. No man who hammered on a dull monotonous duty, could have brought such cheerful notes from steel and iron; none but a chirping, healthy, honest-hearted fellow, who made the best of everything, and felt kindly towards everybody, could have done it for an instant. He might have been a coppersmith, and still been musical. If he had sat in a jolting waggon, full of rods of iron, it seemed as if he would have brought some harmony out of it.

Tink, tink, tink—clear as a silver bell, and audible at every pause of the streets' harsher noises, as though it said, "I don't care; nothing puts me out; I am resolved to be happy." Women scolded, children squall'd, heavy carts went rumbling by, horrible cries proceeded from the lungs of hawkers; still it struck in again, no higher, no lower, no louder, no softer; not thrusting itself on people's notice a bit the more for having been outdone by louder sounds—tink, tink, tink, tink, tink.

It was a perfect embodiment of the still small voice, free from all cold, hoarseness, huskiness, or unhealthiness of any kind; foot-passengers slackened their pace, and were disposed to linger near it; neighbours who had got up splenetic that morning, felt good-humour stealing on them as they heard it, and by degrees became quite sprightly; mothers danced their babies to its ringing; still the same magical tink, tink, tink, came gaily from the workshop of the Golden Key.

Who but the locksmith could have made such music! A gleam of sun shining through the unsashed window, and chequering the dark workshop with a broad patch of light, fell full upon him, as though attracted by his sunny heart. There he stood working at his anvil, his face all radiant with exercise and gladness, his sleeves turned up, his wig pushed off his shining forehead—the easiest, freest, happiest man in all the world. Beside him sat a sleek cat, purring and winking in the light, and falling every now and then into an idle doze, as from excess of comfort. Toby looked on from a tall bench hard by; one beaming smile, from his broad nut-brown face down to the slack-baked buckles in his shoes. The very locks that hung around had something jovial in their rust, and seemed like goaty gentlemen of hearty natures, disposed to joke on their infirmities. There was nothing surlily or severely in the whole scene. It seemed impossible that any one of the innumerable keys could fit a churlish strong-box or a prison-door. Cellars of beer and wine, rooms where there were fires, books, gossip, and cheering laughter—these were their proper sphere of action. Places of distrust, and cruelty, and restraint, they would have left quadruple-locked for ever.

Tink, tink, tink. The locksmith paused at last, and wiped his brow. The silence roused the cat, who, jumping softly down, crept to the door, and watched with tiger eyes a bird-cage in an opposite window. Gabriel lifted Toby to his mouth, and took a hearty draught.
Then, as he stood upright, with his head flung back, and his portly chest thrown out, you would have seen that Gabriel's lower man was clothed in military gear. Glancing at the wall beyond, there might have been espied, hanging on their several pegs, a cap and feather, broadsword, sash, and coat of scarlet; which any man learned in such matters would have known from their make and pattern to be the uniform of a sergeant in the Royal East-London Volunteers.

As the locksmith put his mug down, empty, on the bench whence it had smiled on him before, he glanced at these articles with a laughing eye, and looking at them with his head a little on one side, as though he would get them all into a focus, said, leaning on his hammer:

"Time was, now, I remember, when I was like to run mad with the desire to wear a coat of that colour. If any one (except my father) had called me a fool for my pains, how I should have fired and fumed! But what a fool I must have been, surely!"

"Ah!" sighed Mrs. Varden, who had entered unobserved. "A fool indeed. A man at your time of life, Varden, should know better now?"

"Why, what a ridiculous woman you are, Martha," said the locksmith, turning round with a smile.

"Certainly," replied Mrs. V. with great demureness. "Of course I am. I know that, Varden. Thank you."

"I mean—" began the locksmith.

"Yes," said his wife, "I know what you mean. You speak quite plain enough to be understood, Varden. It's very kind of you to adapt yourself to my capacity, I am sure."

"Tut, tut, Martha," rejoined the locksmith; "don't take offence at nothing. I mean, how strange it is of you to run down volunteering, when it's done to defend you and all the other women, and our own fireside and everybody else's, in case of need."

"It's unchristian," cried Mrs. Varden, shaking her head.

"Unchristian!" said the locksmith. "Why, what the devil—"

Mrs. Varden looked at the ceiling, as in expectation that the consequence of this profanity would be the immediate descent of the four-post bedstead on the second floor, together with the best sitting-room on the first; but no visible judgment occurring, she heaved a deep sigh, and begged her husband, in a tone of resignation, to go on, and by all means to blaspheme as much as possible, because he knew she liked it.

The locksmith did for a moment seem disposed to gratify her, but he gave a great gulp, and mildly rejoined:

"I was going to say, what on earth do you call it unchristian for? Which would be most unchristian, Martha—to sit quietly down and let our houses be sacked by a foreign army, or to turn out like men and drive 'em off? Shouldn't I be a nice sort of a Christian, if I crept into a corner of my own chimney and looked on while a parcel of whiskered savages bore off Dolly—or you—?"

When he said "or you," Mrs. Varden, despite herself, relaxed into a smile. There was something complimentary in the idea. "In such a state of things as that, indeed—" she simpered.
"As that!" repeated the locksmith. "Well, that would be the state of things directly. Even Miggs would go. Some black tambourine-player, with a great turban on, would be bearing her off, and, unless the tambourine-player was proof against kicking and scratching, it's my belief he'd have the worst of it. Ha ha ha! I'd forgive the tambourine-player. I wouldn't have him interfered with on any account, poor fellow." And here the locksmith laughed again so heartily, that tears came into his eyes—much to Mrs. Varden's indignation, who thought the capture of so sound a Protestant and estimable a private character as Miggs by a pagan negro, a circumstance too shocking and awful for contemplation.

The picture Gabriel had drawn, indeed, threatened serious consequences, and would indubitably have led to them, but luckily at that moment a light footstep crossed the threshold, and Dolly, running in, threw her arms round her old father's neck and hugged him tight.

"Here she is at last!" cried Gabriel. "And how well you look, Doll, and how late you are, my darling!"

How well she looked! Well? Why, if he had exhausted every laudatory adjective in the dictionary, it wouldn't have been praise enough. When and where was there ever, such a plump, roguish, comely, bright-eyed, enticing, bewitching, captivating, maddening little puss in all this world, as Dolly! What was the Dolly of five years ago, to the Dolly of that day! How many coachmakers, saddlers, cabinet-makers, and professors of other useful arts, had deserted their fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and, most of all, their cousins, for the love of her! How many unknown gentlemen—supposed to be of mighty fortunes, if not titles—had waited round the corner after dark, and tempted Miggs the incorruptible, with golden guineas, to deliver offers of marriage folded up in love-letters! How many disconsolate fathers and substantial tradesmen had waited on the locksmith for the same purpose, with dismal tales of how their sons had lost their appetites, and taken to shut themselves up in dark bedrooms, and wandering in desolate suburbs with pale faces, and all because of Dolly Varden's loveliness and cruelty! How many young men, in all previous times of unprecedented steadiness, had turned suddenly wild and wicked for the same reason, and, in an ecstasy of unrequited love, taken to wrench off door-knockers, and invert the boxes of rheumatic watchmen! How had she recruited the king's service, both by sea and land, through rendering desperate his loving subjects between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five! How many young ladies had publicly professed, with tears in their eyes, that for their tastes she was much too short, too tall, too bold, too cold, too stout, too thin, too fair, too dark—too everything but handsome! How many old ladies, taking counsel together, had thanked Heaven their daughters were not like her, and had hoped she might come to no harm, and had thought she would come to no good, and had wondered what people saw in her, and had arrived at the conclusion that she was "going off" in her looks, or had never come on in them, and that she was a thorough imposition and a popular mistake!

And yet here was this same Dolly Varden, so whimsical and hard to please that she was Dolly Varden still, all smiles and dimples and pleasant looks, and caring no more for the fifty or sixty young fellows who at that very moment were breaking their hearts to marry her, than if so many oysters had been crossed in love and opened afterwards.

Dolly hugged her father as has been already stated, and having hugged her mother also, accompanied both into the little parlour where the cloth was already laid for dinner, and where Miss Miggs—a trifle more rigid and bony than of yore—received her with a sort of hysterical gasp, intended for a smile. Into the hands of that young virgin, she delivered her bonnet and walking dress (all of a dreadful, artful, and designing kind), and then said with a laugh, which rivalled the locksmith’s music, “How glad I always am to be at home again!”

“And how glad we always are, Doll,” said her father, putting back the dark hair from her sparkling eyes, “to have you at home. Give me a kiss.”

If there had been anybody of the male kind there to see her do it—but there was not—it was a mercy.

“I don’t like your being at the Warren,” said the locksmith, “I can’t bear to have you out of my sight. And what is the news over yonder, Doll!”

“What news there is, I think you know already,” replied his daughter.

“I am sure you do though.”

“Ay!” cried the locksmith. “What’s that?”

“Come, come,” said Dolly, “you know very well. I want you to tell me why Mr. Haredale—oh, how gruff he is again, to be sure!—has been away from home for some days past, and why he is travelling about (we know he is travelling, because of his letters) without telling his own niece why or wherefore.”

“Miss Emma doesn’t want to know, I’ll swear,” returned the locksmith.

“I don’t know that,” said Dolly; “but I do, at any rate. Do tell me. Why is he so secret, and what is this ghost story, which nobody is to tell Miss Emma, and which seems to be mixed up with his going away? Now I see you know, by your colouring so.”

“What the story means, or is, or has to do with it, I know no more than you, my dear,” returned the locksmith, “except that it’s some foolish fear of little Solomon’s—which has, indeed, no meaning in it, I suppose. As to Mr. Haredale’s journey, he goes, as I believe—”

“Yes,” said Dolly.

“As I believe,” resumed the locksmith, pinching her cheek, “on business, Doll. What it may be, is quite another matter. Read Blue Beard, and don’t be too curious, pet; it’s no business of yours or mine, depend upon that; and here’s dinner, which is much more to the purpose.”

Dolly might have remonstrated against this summary dismissal of the subject, notwithstanding the appearance of dinner, but at the mention of Blue Beard Mrs. Varden interposed, protesting she could not find it in her conscience to sit tamely by, and hear her child recommended to peruse the adventures of a Turk and Mussulman—far less of a fabulous Turk, which she considered that Potentate to be. She held that, in such stirring and tremendous times as those in which they lived, it would be much more to the purpose if Dolly became a regular subscriber to the Thunderer, where she would have an opportunity of reading Lord George Gordon's speeches word for word, which would be a greater comfort and solace to her, than a hundred and fifty Blue Beards ever could impart. She appealed in support of this proposition to Miss Miggs, then in waiting, who said that indeed the peace of mind she had derived from the perusal of that paper generally, but especially of one article of the very last week as ever was, entitled "Great Britain drenched in gore," exceeded all belief; the same composition, she added, had also wrought such a comforting effect on the mind of a married sister of hers, then resident at Golden Lion Court, number twenty-six, second bell-handle on the right-hand doors-post, that, being in a delicate state of health, and in fact expecting an addition to her family, she had been seized with fits directly after its perusal, and had raved of the Inquisition ever since; to the great improvement of her husband and friends. Miss Miggs went on to say that she would recommend all those whose hearts were hardened to hear Lord George themselves, whom she commended first, in respect of his steady Protestantism, then of his oratory, then of his eyes, then of his nose, then of his legs, and lastly of his figure generally, which she looked upon as fit for any statue, prince, or angel, to which sentiment Mrs. Varden fully subscribed.

Mrs. Varden having cut in, looked at a box upon the mantle-shelf, painted in imitation of a very red-brick dwelling-house, with a yellow roof; having at top a real chimney, down which voluntary subscribers dropped their silver, gold, or pence, into the parlour; and on the door the counterfeit presentment of a brass plate, whereon was legibly inscribed "Protestant Association:"­ and looking at it, said, that it was to her a source of poignant misery to think that Varden never had, of all his substance, dropped anything into that temple, save once in secret—as she afterwards discovered—two fragments of tobacco-pipe, which she hoped would not be put down to his last account. That Dolly, she was grieved to say, was no less backward in her contributions, better loving, as it seemed, to purchase ribbons and such gauds, than to encourage the great cause, then in such heavy tribulation; and that she did entreat her (her father she much feared could not be moved) not to despise, but imitate, the bright example of Miss Miggs, who flung her wages, as it were, into the very countenance of the Pope, and bruised his features with her quarter's money.

"Oh, mim," said Miggs, "don't relude to that. I had no intentions, mim, that nobody should know. Such sacrifices as I can make, are quite a widder's nite.
It's all I have," cried Miggs with a great burst of tears—for with her they never came on by degrees—but it's made up to me in other ways; it's well made up."

This was quite true, though not perhaps in the sense that Miggs intended.
As she never failed to keep her self-denial full in Mrs. Varden's view, it drew forth so many gifts of caps and gowns and other articles of dress, that upon the whole the red-brick house was perhaps the best investment for her small capital she could possibly have hit upon; returning her interest, at the rate of seven or eight per cent. in money, and fifty at least in personal repute and credit.

"You needn't cry, Miggs," said Mrs. Varden, herself in tears; "you needn't be ashamed of it, though your poor mistress is on the same side."
Miggs howled at this remark, in a peculiarly dismal way, and said she knew that master hated her. That it was a dreadful thing to live in families and have dislikes, and not give satisfaction. That to make divisions was a thing she could not bear to think of, neither could her feelings let her do it. That if it was master's wishes as she and him should part, it was best they should part, and she hoped he might be the happier for it, and always wishes him well, and that he might find somebody as would meet his dispositions. It would be a hard trial, she said, to part from such a missis, but she could meet any suffering when her conscience told her she was in the rights, and therefore she was willing even to go that lengths. She did not think, she added, that she could long survive the separations, but, as she was hated and looked upon unpleasant, perhaps her dying as soon as possible would be the best endings for all parties. With this affecting conclusion, Miss Miggs shed more tears, and sobbed abundantly.

"Can you bear this, Varden?" said his wife in a solemn voice, laying down her knife and fork.

"Why, not very well, my dear," rejoined the locksmith, "but I try to keep my temper."

"Don't let there be words on my account, mimi," sobbed Miggs. "It's much the best that we should part. I wouldn't stay—oh, gracious me!—and make dissensions, not for a annual gold mine, and found in tea and sugar."

Lost the reader should be at any loss to discover the cause of Miss Miggs's deep emotion, it may be whispered apart that, happening to be listening, as her custom sometimes was, when Gabriel and his wife conversed together, she had heard the locksmith's joke relative to the foreign black who played the tambourine, and bursting with the spiteful feelings which the taunt awoke in her fair breast, exploded in the manner we have witnessed. Matters having now arrived at a crisis, the locksmith as usual, and for the sake of peace and quietness, gave in.

"What are you crying for, girl?" he said. "What's the matter with you? What are you talking about hatred for? I don't hate you; I don't hate anybody. Dry your eyes and make yourself agreeable, in Heaven's name, and let us all be happy while we can."

The allied powers deeming it good generalship to consider this a sufficient apology on the part of the enemy, and confession of having been in the wrong, did dry their eyes and take it in good part. Miss Miggs observed that she bore no malice, no not to her greatest foe, whom she rather loved the more indeed, the greater persecution she sustained. Mrs. Varden approved of this meek and forgiving spirit in high terms, and incidentally declared as a closing article of agreement, that Dolly should accompany her to the Clerkenwell branch of the association, that very night. This was an extraordinary instance of her great prudence and policy; having had this end in view from the first, and entertaining a secret misgiving that the locksmith (who was bold when Dolly was in question) would object, she had backed Miss Miggs up to this point, in order that she might have him at a disadvantage. The manœuvre succeeded so well that Gabriel only made a wry face, and with the warning he had just had, fresh in his mind, did not dare to say one word.
The difference ended, therefore, in Miggs being presented with a gown by Mrs. Varden and half-a-crown by Dolly, as if she had eminently distinguished herself in the paths of morality and goodness. Mrs. V., according to custom, expressed her hope that Varden would take a lesson from what had passed and learn more generous conduct for the time to come; and the dinner being now cold and nobody’s appetite very much improved by what had passed, they went on with it, as Mrs. Varden said, “like Christians.”

As there was to be a grand parade of the Royal East London Volunteers that afternoon, the locksmith did no more work; but sat down comfortably with his pipe in his mouth, and his arm round his pretty daughter’s waist, looking lovingly on Mrs. V. from time to time, and exhibiting from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, one smiling surface of good humour. And to be sure, when it was time to dress him in his regimentals, and Dolly, hanging about him in all kinds of graceful winning ways, helped to button and buckle and brush him up and get him into one of the tightest coats that ever was made by mortal tailor, he was the proudest father in all England.

“What a handy jade it is!” said the locksmith to Mrs. Varden, who stood by with folded hands—rather proud of her husband too—while Miggs held his cap and sword at arm’s length, as if mistrusting that the latter might run some one through the body of its own accord; “but never marry a soldier Doll, my dear.”

Dolly didn’t ask why not, or say a word indeed, but stooped her head down very low to tie his sash.

“I never wear this dress,” said honest Gabriel, “but I think of poor Joe Willet. I loved Joe; he was always a favourite of mine. Poor Joe!—Dear heart, my girl, don't tie me in so tight."

Dolly laughed—not like herself at all—the strangest little laugh that could be—and held her head down lower still.

"Poor Joe!" resumed the locksmith, muttering to himself; "I always wish he had come to me. I might have made it up between them, if he had. Ah! old John made a great mistake in his way of acting by that lad—a great mistake. Have you nearly tied that sash, my dear?"

What an ill-made sash it was! There it was, loose again and trailing on the ground. Dolly was obliged to kneel down, and recommence at the beginning.

"Never mind young Willet, Varden," said his wife frowning; "you might find some one more deserving to talk about, I think."

Miss Miggs gave a great sniff to the same effect.

"Nay, Martha," cried the locksmith, "don't let us bear too hard upon him. If the lad is dead indeed, we'll deal kindly by his memory."

"A runaway and a vagabond!" said Mrs. Varden.

Miss Miggs expressed her concurrence as before.

"A runaway, my dear, but not a vagabond," returned the locksmith in a gentle tone. "He behaved himself well, did Joe—always—and was a handsome manly fellow. Don't call him a vagabond, Martha."

Mrs. Varden coughed—and so did Miggs.

"He tried hard to gain your good opinion, Martha, I can tell you," said the locksmith smiling, and strokes his chin. "Ah! that he did. It seems but yesterday that he followed me out to the Maypole door one night, and begged me not to say how like a boy they used him—say here, at home, he meant, though at the time, I recollect, I didn't understand. And how's Miss Dolly, sir?" says Joe, pursued the locksmith, musing sorrowfully, "Ah! Poor Joe!"

"Well, I declare," cried Miggs. "Oh! Goodness gracious me!"

"What's the matter now?" said Gabriel, turning sharply to her.

"Why, if there ain't Miss Dolly," said the handmaid, stooping down to look into her face, "a giving way to floods of tears. Oh mini! oh sir. Rely it's give me such turn, cried the susceptible damsel, pressing her hand upon her side to quell the palpitation of her heart, "that you might knock me down with a feather."

The locksmith, after glancing at Miss Miggs as if he could have wished to have a feather brought straightway, looked on with a broad stare while Dolly hurried away, followed by that sympathising young woman; then turning to his wife, stammered out, "Is Dolly ill? Have I done anything? Is it my fault?"

"Your fault!" cried Mrs. V. reproachfully. "There—You had better make haste out."

"What have I done?" said poor Gabriel. "It was agreed that Mr. Edward's name was never to be mentioned, and I have not spoken of him, have I!"

Mrs. Varden merely replied that she had no patience with him, and bounded off after the other two. The unfortunate locksmith wound his sash about him, girded on his sword, put on his cap, and walked out.

"I am not much of a dab at my exercise," he said under his breath, "but I shall get into fewer scrapes at that work than at this. Every man came into the world for something; my department seems to be to make every woman cry without meaning it. It's rather hard!"

But he forgot it before he reached the end of the street, and went on with a shining face, nodding to the neighbours, and showering about his friendly greetings like mild spring rain.

CHAPTER THE FORTY-SECOND.

The Royal East London Volunteers made a brilliant sight that day: formed into lines, squares, circles, triangles, and what not, to the beating of drums and the streaming of flags; and performed a vast number of complex evolutions, in all of which Sergeant Varden bore a conspicuous share. Having displayed their military prowess to the utmost in these warlike shows, they marched in glittering order to the Chelsea Bun-house, and regaled in the adjacent taverns until dark. Then at sound of drum they fell in again, and returned amidst the shouting of His Majesty's lieges to the place from whence they came.

The homeward march being somewhat tardy,—owing to the un-soldierlike behaviour of certain corporals, who, being gentlemen of sedentary pursuits in private life and excitable out of doors, broke several windows with their bayonets, and rendered it imperative on the commanding officer to deliver them over to a strong guard, with whom they fought at intervals as they came along,—it was nine o'clock when the locksmith reached home. A hackney-coach was waiting near his door; and as he passed it, Mr. Haredale looked from the window and called him by his name.

"The sight of you is good for sore eyes, sir," said the locksmith, stepping up to him. "I wish you had walked in though, rather than waited here."

"There is nobody at home, I find," Mr. Haredale answered; "besides, I desired to be as private as I could."

"Humph!" muttered the locksmith, looking round at his house. "Gone with Simon Tappertit to that precious Branch, no doubt."

Mr. Haredale invited him to come into the coach, and, if he were not tired or anxious to go home, to ride with him a little way that they might have some talk together. Gabriel cheerfully complied, and the coachman mounting his box drove off.

"Varden," said Mr. Haredale after a minute's pause, "you will be amazed to hear what errand I am on; it will seem a very strange one."

"I have no doubt it's a reasonable one, sir, and has a meaning in it," replied the locksmith; "or it would not be yours at all. Have you just come back to town, sir?"

"But half an hour ago."

"Bringing no news of Barnaby, or his mother?" said the locksmith dubiously. "Ah! you needn't shake your head, sir. It was a wild-goose chase."
I feared that, from the first. You exhausted all reasonable means of discovery when they went away. To begin again after so long a time has passed is hopeless, sir—quite hopeless."

"Why, where are they?" he returned impatiently. "Where can they be! Above ground!"

"God knows," rejoined the locksmith, "many that I knew above it five years ago, have their beds under the grass now. And the world is a wide place. It's a hopeless attempt, sir, believe me. We must leave the discovery of this mystery, like all others, to time, and accident, and Heaven's pleasure."

"Varden, my good fellow," said Mr. Haredale, "I have a deeper meaning in my present anxiety to find them out, than you can fathom. It is not a mere whim; it is not the casual revival of my old wishes and desires; but an earnest, solemn purpose. My thoughts and dreams all tend to it, and fix it in my mind. I have no rest by day or night; I have no peace or quiet; I am haunted."

His voice was so altered from its usual tones, and his manner bespoke so much emotion, that Gabriel, in his wonder, could only sit and look towards him in the darkness, and fancy the expression of his face.

"Do not ask me," continued Mr. Haredale, "to explain myself. If I were to do so, you would think me the victim of some hideous fancy. It is enough that this is so, and that I cannot—no, I can not—lie quietly in my bed, without doing what will seem to you incomprehensible."

"Since when, sir," said the locksmith after a pause, "has this uneasy feeling been upon you?"

Mr. Haredale hesitated for some moments, and then replied: "Since the night of the storm. In short, since the last nineteenth of March."

As though he feared that Varden might express surprise, or reason with him, he hastily went on:

"You will think, I know, I labour under some delusion. Perhaps I do. But it is not a morbid one; it is a wholesome action of the mind, reasoning on actual occurrences. You know the furniture remains in Mrs. Rudge's house, and that it has been shut up, by my orders, since she went away, save once a-week or so, when an old neighbour visits it to scare away the rats. I am on my way there now."

"For what purpose?" asked the locksmith.

"To pass the night there," he replied; "and not to-night alone, but many nights. This is a secret which I trust to you in case of any unexpected emergency. You will not come, unless in case of strong necessity, to me; from dusk to broad day, I shall be there. Emma, your daughter, and the rest, suppose me out of London, as I have been until within this hour. Do not undeceive them. This is the errand I am bound upon. I know I may confide it to you, and I rely upon your questioning me no further at this time."

With that, as if to change the theme, he led the astounded locksmith back to the night of the Maypole highwayman, to the robbery of Edward Chester, to the reappearance of the man at Mrs. Rudge's house, and to all the strange circumstances which afterwards occurred. He even asked him carelessly about the man's height, his face, his figure, whether he was like any one he had ever seen—like Hugh, for instance, or any man he had known at any time—and put many questions of that sort, which the locksmith, considering them as mere devices to engage his attention and prevent his expressing the astonishment he felt, answered pretty much at random.

At length they arrived at the corner of the street in which the house stood, where Mr. Haredale, alighting, dismissed the coach. "If you desire to see me safely lodged," he said, turning to the locksmith with a gloomy smile, "you can."

Gabriel, to whom all former marvels had been nothing in comparison with this, followed him along the narrow pavement in silence. When they reached the door, Mr. Haredale softly opened it with a key he had about him, and closing it when Varden entered, they were left in thorough darkness.

They groped their way into the ground-floor room. Here Mr. Haredale struck a light, and kindled a pocket taper he had brought with him for the purpose. It was then, when the flame was full upon him, that the locksmith saw for the first time how haggard, pale, and changed he looked; how worn and thin he was; how perfectly his whole appearance coincided with all that he had said so strangely as they rode along. It was not an unnatural impulse in Gabriel, after what he had heard, to note curiously the expression of his eyes. It was perfectly collected and rational;—so much so, indeed, that he felt ashamed of his momentary suspicion, and drooped his own when Mr. Haredale looked towards him, as if he feared they would betray his thoughts.

"Will you walk through the house?" said Mr. Haredale, with a glance towards the window, the crazy shutters of which were closed and fastened. "Speak low."

There was a kind of awe about the place, which would have rendered it difficult to speak in any other manner. Gabriel whispered "Yes," and followed him up stairs.

Everything was just as they had seen it last. There was a sense of closeness from the exclusion of fresh air, and a gloom and heaviness around, as though long imprisonment had made the very silence sad. The homely hangings of the beds and windows had begun to droop; the dust lay thick upon their dwindling folds; and damp had made their way through ceiling, wall, and floor. The boards creaked beneath their tread as if resenting the unaccustomed intrusion; nimble spiders, paralysed by the taper's glare, checked the motion of their hundred legs upon the wall, or dropped like lifeless things upon the ground; the death-watch ticked aloud; and the scampering feet of rats and mice rattled behind the wainscot.

As they looked about them on the decaying furniture, it was strange to find how vividly it presented those to whom it had belonged, and with whom it was once familiar. Grip seemed to perch again upon his high-backed chair; Barnaby to crouch in his old favourite corner by the fire; the mother to resume her usual seat, and watch him as of old. Even when they could separate these objects from the phantoms of the mind which they invoked, the latter only glided out of sight, but lingered near them still; for then they seemed to lurk in closets and behind the doors, ready to start out and suddenly accost them in their well-remembered tones.
They went down stairs, and again into the room they had just now left. Mr. Haredale unbuckled his sword and laid it on the table, with a pair of pocket pistols; then told the locksmith he would light him to the door.

"But this is a dull place, sir," said Gabriel, lingering; "may no one share your watch?"

He shook his head, and so plainly evinced his wish to be alone, that Gabriel could say no more. In another moment the locksmith was standing in the street, whence he could see that the light once more travelled up-stairs, and soon returning to the room below, shone brightly through the chinks in the shutters.

If ever man were sorely puzzled and perplexed, the locksmith was, that night. Even when snugly seated by his own fireside, with Mrs. Varden opposite in a night-cap and night-jacket, and Dolly beside him (in a most distracting dishabille) curling her hair, and smiling as if she had never cried in all her life and never could—even then, with Toby at his elbow and his pipe in his mouth, and Miggs (but that perhaps was not much) falling asleep in the back-ground, he could not quite discard his wonder and uneasiness. So, in his dreams—still there was Mr. Haredale, haggard and careworn, listening in the solitary house to every sound that stirred, with the taper shining through the chinks until the day should turn it pale and end his lonely watching.
THOS. HARRIS & SON'S
ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES.

Warranted unalloyed by any other house at the price. On ordering a telescope, the post is free, to any part of the kingdom, and exchanged if not approved. No mark or foreign plate should be without one.

A pocket telescope to show objects 4 miles off £1 10s.
A pocket telescope to show objects 10 miles off £2 2s.
A pocket telescope to show objects 50 miles off £4 0s.

THOS. HARRIS & SON, Opticians to the Royal Family, No. 35, opposite the British Museum, London, established 60 years. Retail, not related to, nor connected with, a house of the same name.

FLUTES.—Eight-keyed COFFEE FLUTES, with patented head, double spirals, to the keys, tips, &c., of the best silver, £5 5s., or German silver, £4 6s. These flutes are made of the finest wood, finished with great care, and warranted perfect in tone.

Manufactured by H. PENTIM, Teacher of the Flute, 17, Northumberland-street, Strand.

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING CREAM, patronised by Prince Albert.

This insubstantial cream possesses all the good qualities of the finest Naples soap, without the disagreeable smell inseparable from that article in a genuine state. It is a white pearly appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not dry on the face, and emits in use the delightful flavour of the almond.

Invented and prepared by his MAJESTY'S PERFUMERS.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO., SUCCESSORS TO PRICE & GOSNELL, at the original establishment, 169, Regent-street, and 13, Three Kings-court, Lombard-street. Prophets of Prince Albert's ROYAL VICTORIA ROUGE, Soap Tablets without angles, &c.

BALSAW OF ROSES FOR PRESERVING AND PROMOTING THE GROWTH OF THE HAIR.—This Balsam is prepared principally from Roses, from which it derives mild antivitamin properties, properly adapted to the nourishing and strengthening the Hair. It is not only mild, but has been improved in quality, colour, or fragrance, by sickness or change of climate, or by any other cause of premature decay, will be restored to its strength and beauty.

Manufactured and Sold by ROGERS, BURGESS, and ROGERS, 31, New Bond Street. Price 6s. 6d. per box.

PATE1NT BODY SUPPORTS, &c.
STAYS SUITTED TO THE VARIOUS CONDITIONS OF THE BODY IN THE SINGLE AND MARRIED STATE.

Manufacturers, WILKINS & CO. Inventors, JOS. JASPER, Esq., Surgeon, W. & Co. are enabled to state that this safe and elegant invention is recommended to all physicians for being constructed upon scientific principles, by which it is so contrived as to prevent the injurious effects of the support, and other inventions, produced by ordinary Stays as Corsets. It strengthens the Chest, and favours its natural development, tends to maintain and also to restore the health, and is in other respects advantageous in many particulars. Sold at the Factory, 3, Recreation-street, Oxford Street, and by all Dressmakers in Town and Country appointed as Agents. Agents wanted in Town & Country.

TO ANGLERS.
THE GOLDEN PERCH.—Prices of Tackle lower than ever. A joint best ever. Fly Rods, with two box, which fittings, socket, spear, hanging handle, and partition bag, £2. 15s.; jointed fittings, general dress, £2. 12s.; 6 joint fittings, £2. 6s.; 8 joint Bamboo Perch and Roach Rods, branded with fittings and rings, 15s.; very best Flies, 2s. per dozen; Fly Cases, 15s.; Wincey 6d.; jointed fittings, in diameter 1½; Taper Fly Lines, 50 yards, £2. 2d.; ditto, the very best, 40 yards, 5s., 4½ yards Gut Lines 2s. New Catalogues, containing the prices of several hundred articles, with the latest Angler's Instructeur, gratis, on application, or FLY-PEOPLE (post-paid) in answer to a letter. Country orders strictly attended to, and any article exchanged if not approved of.—R. B. Meredith and Country Dealers supplied. J. C. GREEN, Proprietor and Manufacturer, 183, Regent-street, Oxford-street, and 23, Strand.

BEART'S PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Engineers and Men of Science, to surpass that of any other Coffee Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to serve to table, without trouble, a Pot of Coffee surpassing, in brilliancy of colour and flavour, the most magnificent wishes of the greatest epicure in this delicious beverage. We have heard a great deal of the laudation of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, without trouble they drink Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusion, the Aroma only is extracted, and the ruined and injurious parts remain in the grounds.

It is a well known fact, that, from the introduction of Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted to prevent the inconvenience of this. Pneumatic filters have been invented, and all have failed; some, from their requiring a scientific person to use them; others, from the length of time occupied in making the Coffee, and the inconvenience of being nearly cold when brought to table.

The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanical Section of the British Association, at their meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that his invention surpased, from its great simplicity, anything they had before seen, being in every respect adapted for general use.

The article has now been before the public for more than Six Months, and

HAS GIVEN UNIVERAL SATISFACTION TO ALL WHO HAVE PURCHASED IT.
A fair trial only is required to ensure satisfaction to the most exacting beverage, of which the only mode by which these can be made is TWO QUARTS OF COFFEE MADE IN FIVE MINUTES.

BEART'S PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER, BRILLIANTLY CLEAR AND BOILING HOT.

TO BE HAD OF ALL RESPECTABLE IRONMONGERS IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

B. WALTON AND CO., SOLE MANUFACTURERS, WOLVERHAMPTON.

GET ALONG, ROSEY.—This admirable new song, composed by Madame Flora Tull, in the hundred and fifty times in "Beauty and the Beast," is now published, with an excellent choral version of Madame Trotter as Beauty, and may be had retail, of all Music sellers, and wholesalers, of Jefferys and Nelson, 21, Holborn.
THE NATURAL HISTORY OF CAGE BIRDS;
THEIR MANAGEMENT, HABITS, FOOD, DISEASES, TREATMENT, BREEDING, & THE METHODS OF CATCHING THEM.
BY J. M. BECHSTEIN, M.D.

Hand-books for the People.

The Hand-book of Bathing.

Price 2s.

The Hand-book of Gardening; or, Lessons from the Garden; Intended for the Use of the Middle Classes.

Price 2s.

The Hand-book of Cookery; or, Modern Cookery for Private Families.

Price 2s.

The Hand-book of Natural Philosophy.

Price 1s. 6d.

A Practical Treatise on the Cultivation of the Dahlia.

By J. Paxton, F.L.S., &c.

Publishing in Monthly Numbers, price 6d., and in Volumes, price 6s. 6d.

The Magazine of Domestic Economy.

This Magazine has now become a standard work, and will be found a most valuable family book. Any volume may be had bound in cloth, price 6s. 6d.

Bradbury and Evans, Printers, Whitefriars.