1841

Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 70

Charles Dickens

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge

Recommended Citation

Dickens, Charles, "Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 70" (1841). Barnaby Rudge. 25.
https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge/25

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Novels at Digital WPI. It has been accepted for inclusion in Barnaby Rudge by an authorized administrator of Digital WPI. For more information, please contact digitalwpi@wpi.edu.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS.

Heavily bound in cloth, with edges marbled, price 6s. each, the First and Second Volumes of

MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK.

with

ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATTERMOLE AND HABLOT BROWNE.

In Three Volumes, post octavo, price 2s. each, cloth,

OLIVER TWIST.

with an Introduction by the Author.

Each in One Volume octavo, price bound in cloth, 4s. 6d.

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.

with Illustrations by Phiz,

and a Portrait of the Author, engraved by Fison, from a Painting by D. Maclise, A.R.A.

EIGHTH EDITION. In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards, SKETCHES OF YOUNG LADIES.

with Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

FIFTH EDITION. In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards, SKETCHES OF YOUNG C hustemen.

with Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

In One Volume, small 8vo, price 3s. boards,

SKETCHES OF YOUNG COUPLES.

with Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

Bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 5s. 6d.

THE HAND-BOOK OF SWINDLING.

By the late Captain Renalds Whittaker,

Knight of every Office of the Garters, A.C.A.M.P. and C.U.B.

with Illustrations by "Phiz."

Pocket Travelling Maps, with all the Railways correctly laid down, as far as they at present extend.

Mounted in Cases adapted to the Waistcoat Pocket, 1s. 6d. each,

MAPS OF THE ENGLISH COUNTIES.

Engraved by Sidney Hall.

with the Mail and Coach Roads correctly coloured.

Berkshire

Buckinghamshire

Cambridgeshire

Cheshire

Cornwall

Cumberland

Derbyshire

Devonshire

Dorsetshire

Durham

England

Gloucestershire

Hampshire

Herefordshire

Hertfordshire

Huntingdonshire

Isle of Wight

Islands of Man, Jersey, and Guernsey

Kent

Lancashire

Leicestershire

Lincolnshire

Middlesex

Monmouthshire

Norfolk

Northamptonshire

Northumberland

Nottinghamshire

Oxfordshire

Rutland

Shropshire

Somersetshire

Staffordshire

Suffolk

Surrey

Sussex

Warwickshire

Wiltshire

Yorkshire

Yorkshire, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales.

Complete Sets of the above, unrippled and lettered, in a neat case, may be had, price Four Guineas.

A New Edition, with all the New Lines of Railroads correctly laid down, price 8s., mounted in a case, showing the Course of all the Canals, Railroads, and Navigable Rivers in England and Scotland.

A MAP OF THE INLAND COMMUNICATION,

In the exhaustless catalogue of Heaven’s mercies to mankind, the power we have of finding some germs of comfort in the hardest trials must ever occupy the foremost place; not only because it supports and upholds us when we most require to be sustained, but because in this source of consolation there is something, we have reason to believe, of the divine spirit; something of that goodness which detects amidst our own evil doings, a redeeming quality; something which, even in our fallen nature, we possess in common with the angels; which had its being in the old time when they trod the earth, and fingers on it yet, in pity.

How often, on their journey, did the widow remember with a grateful heart, that out of his deprivation Barnaby’s cheerfulness and affection sprang! How often did she call to mind that but for that, he might have been sullen, morose, unkind, far removed from her—vicious, perhaps, and cruel! How often had she cause for comfort, in his strength, and hope, and in his simple nature! Those feeble powers of mind which rendered him so soon forgetful of the past, save in brief gleams and flashes,—even they were a comfort now. The world to him was full of happiness; in every tree, and plant, and flower, in every bird, and beast, and tiny insect whom a breath of summer wind laid low upon the ground, he had delight. His delight was hers; and where many a wise son would have made her sorrowful, this poor light-hearted idiot filled her breast with thankfulness and love.

Their stock of money was low, but from the hoard she had told into the blind man’s hand, the widow had withheld one guinea. This, with the few pence she possessed besides, was to two persons of their frugal habits, a goodly sum in bank. Moreover they had Grip in company; and when they must otherwise have changed the guinea, it was but to make him exhibit outside an alehouse door, or in a village street, or in the grounds or gardens of a mansion of the better sort, and scores, who would have given nothing in charity, were ready to bargain for more amusement from the talking bird.

One day—for they moved slowly, and although they had many rides in carts and waggons, were on the road a week—Barnaby, with Grip upon his shoulder and his mother following, begged permission at a trim lodge to go up to the great house, at the other end of the avenue, and show his raven. The man within was inclined to give them admittance, and was indeed about to do so, when a stout gentleman with a long whip in his hand, and a flushed face which seemed to indicate that he had had his morning’s draught, rode up to the gate, and called in a loud voice and with more oaths than the occasion seemed to warrant to have it opened directly.

"Who hast thou got here?" said the gentleman angrily, as the man threw the gate wide open, and pulled off his hat, "who are these? Eh! ar’t a beggar, woman?"

The widow answered with a curtsey, that they were poor travellers.
"Vagrants," said the gentleman, "vagrants and vagabonds. Thee wish to be made acquainted with the cage, dost thee—the cage, the stocks, and the whipping-post! Where dost come from?"

She told him in a timid manner—for he was very loud, coarse, and red-faced,—and begged him not to be angry, for they meant no harm and would go upon their way that moment.

"Don't be too sure of that," replied the gentleman, "we don't allow vagrants to roam about this place. I know what thou want'st—stray linen drying on hedges, and stray poultry, oh? what hast got in that basket, lazy hound!"

"Grip, Grip, Grip—Grip the clever, Grip the wicked, Grip the knowing—Grip, Grip, Grip," cried the raven, whom Barnaby had shut up on the approach of this stern personage. "I'm a devil I'm a devil! Never say die Hurrah Bow wow wow, Polly put the kettle on we'll all have tea."

"Take the virmin out, scoundrel," said the gentleman, "and let me see him."

Barnaby, thus condescendingly addressed, produced his bird, but not without much fear and trembling, and set him down upon the ground; which he had sooner done than Grip drew fifty corks at least, and then began to dance; the same time eyeing the gentleman with surprising insolence of manner, and screwing his head so much on one side that he appeared desirous of screwing it off upon the spot.

The cork-drawing seemed to make a greater impression on the gentleman's mind, than the raven's power of speech, and was indeed particularly adapted to his habits and capacity. He desired to have that done again, but despite his being very peremptory, and notwithstanding that Barnaby coaxed to the utmost, Grip turned a deaf ear to the request, and preserved a dead silence.

"Bring him along," said the gentleman, pointing to the house. But Grip, who had watched the action, anticipated his master, by hopping on before them; constantly flapping his wings, and screaming "cook!" meanwhile, as a hint perhaps that there was company coming, and a small collation would be acceptable.

Barnaby and his mother walked on, on either side of the gentleman on horseback, who surveyed each of them from time to time in a proud and coarse manner, and occasionally thundered out some question, the tone of which alarmed Barnaby so much that he could find no answer, and, as a matter of course, could make him no reply. On one of these occasions, when the gentleman appeared disposed to exercise his horsewhip, the widow ventured to inform him in a low voice and with tears in her eyes, that her son was of weak mind.

"An idiot, eh?" said the gentleman looking at Barnaby as he spoke. "And how long hast been an idiot?"

"She knows," was Barnaby's timid answer, pointing to his mother—"I always, I believe."

"From his birth," said the widow.

"I don't believe it," cried the gentleman, "not a bit of it. It's an excuse not to work. There's nothing like flogging to cure that disorder. I'd make a difference in him in ten minutes, I'll be bound."
"Heaven has made none in more than twice ten years, sir," said the widow mildly.

"Then why don't you shut him up? we pay enough for county institutions, damn 'em. But thou'd rather drag him about to excite charity—of course. Ay, I know thee."

Now, this gentleman had various endearing appellations among his intimate friends. By some he was called "a country gentleman of the true school," by some "a fine old country gentleman," by some "a sporting gentleman," by some "a thorough-bred Englishman," by some "a genuine John Bull;" but they all agreed in one respect, and that was, that it was a pity there were not more like him, and that because there were not, the country was going to rack and ruin every day. He was in the commission of the peace, and could write his name almost legibly; but his greatest qualifications were, that he was more severe with poachers, was a better shot, a harder rider, had better horses, kept better dogs, could eat more solid food, drink more strong wine, go to bed every night more drunk and get up every morning more sober, than any man in the county. In knowledge of horseflesh he was almost equal to a farrier, in stable learning he surpassed his own head groom, and in gluttony not a pig on his estate was a match for him. He had no seat in Parliament himself, but he was extremely patriotic, and usually drove his voters up to the poll with his own hands. He was warmly attached to the church, and never appointed to the living in his gift any but a three-bottle man and a first-rate fox-hunter. He mistrusted the honesty of all poor people who could read and write, and had a secret jealousy of his own wife (a young lady whom he had married for what his friends called "the good old English reason," that her father's property adjoined his own) for possessing those accomplishments in a greater degree than himself. In short, Barnaby being an idiot, and Grip a creature of mere brute instinct, it would be very hard to say what this gentleman was.

He rode up to the door of a handsome house approached by a great flight of steps, where a man was waiting to take his horse, and led the way into a large hall, which, spacious as it was, was tainted with the fumes of last night's stale debauch. Great-coats, riding-whips, bridles, top boots, spurs, and such gear, were strewn about on all sides, and formed, with some huge stags' antlers, and a few portraits of dogs and horses, its principal embellishments.

Throwing himself into a great chair (in which, by the bye, he often snored away the night, when he had been, according to his admirers, a finer country gentleman than usual) he bade the man tell his mistress to come down: and presently there appeared, a little flurried, as it seemed, by the unwonted summons, a lady much younger than himself, who had the appearance of being in delicate health, and not too happy.

"Here! Thou'st no delight in following the hounds as an Englishwoman should have," said the gentleman. "See to this here. That'll please thee perhaps."

The lady smiled, sat down at a little distance from him, and glanced at Barnaby with a look of pity.

"He's an idiot, the woman says," observed the gentleman, shaking his head; "I don't believe it."
"Are you his mother?" asked the lady.

She answered yes.

"What's the use of asking her?" said the gentleman, thrusting his hands into his breeches pockets. "She'll tell thee so, of course. Most likely he's hired, at so much a day. There. Get on. Make him do something."

Grip having by this time recovered his urbanity, condescended, at Barnaby's solicitation, to repeat his various phrases of speech, and to go through the whole of his performances with the utmost success. The corks, and the never say die, afforded the gentleman so much delight that he demanded the repetition of this part of the entertainment, until Grip got into his basket, and positively refused to say another word, good or bad. The lady too, was much amused with him; and the closing point of his obstinacy so delighted her husband that he burst into a roar of laughter, and demanded his price.

Barnaby looked as though he didn't understand his meaning. Probably he did not.

"His price," said the gentleman, rattling the money in his pockets, "what dost want for him? How much?"

"He's not to be sold," replied Barnaby, shutting up the basket in a great hurry, and throwing the strap over his shoulder. "Mother, come away."

"Thou seest how much of an idiot he is, book-learner," said the gentleman, looking scornfully at his wife. "He can make a bargain. What dost want for him, old woman?"
"Ho is my son's constant companion," said the widow. "Ho is not to be sold, sir, indeed."

"Not to be sold!" cried the gentleman, growing ten times redder, hoarser, and louder than before. "Not to be sold!"

"Indeed no," she answered. "We have never thought of parting with him, sir, I do assure you."

He was evidently about to make a very passionate retort, when a few murmured words from his wife happening to catch his ear, he turned sharply round, and said, "Eh? What?"

"We can hardly expect them to sell the bird, against their own desire," she faltered. "If they prefer to keep him——"

"Prefer to keep him!" he echoed. "These people, who go tramping about the country, a pilfering and vagabondizing on all hands, prefer to keep a bird, when a landed proprietor and a justice asks his price! That old woman's been to school. I know she has. Don't tell me no," he roared to the widow, "I say, yes."

Barnaby's mother pleaded guilty to the accusation, and hoped there was no harm in it.

"No harm!" said the gentleman. "No. No harm. No harm, ye old rebel, not a bit of harm. If my clerk was here, I'd set ye in the stocks, I would, or lay ye in jail for prowling up and down, on the look-out for petty larcenies, ye limb of a gipsy. Here, Simon, put these pilferers out, shove 'em into the road, out with 'em! Ye don't want to sell the bird, ye that come here to beg, don't ye? If they ain't out in double-quick, set the dogs upon 'em!"

They waited for no further dismissal, but fled precipitately, leaving the gentleman to storm away by himself (for the poor lady had already retreated), and making a great many vain attempts to silence Grip, who, excited by the noise, drew corks enough for a city feast as they hurried down the avenue, and appeared to congratulate himself beyond measure on having been the cause of the disturbance.

When they had nearly reached the lodge, another servant, emerging from the shrubbery, feigned to be very active in ordering them off, but this man put a crown into the widow's hand, and whispering that his lady sent it, thrust them gently from the gate.

This incident only suggested to the widow's mind, when they halted at an alehouse some miles further on, and heard the justice's character as given by his friends, that perhaps something more than capacity of stomach and tastes for the kennel and the stable, were required to form either a perfect country gentleman, a thorough-bred Englishman, or a genuine John Bull; and that possibly the terms were sometimes misappropriated, not to say disgraced.

She little thought then, that a circumstance so slight would ever influence their future fortunes; but time and experience enlightened her in this respect.

"Mother," said Barnaby, as they were sitting next day in a wagon which was to take them to within ten miles of the capital, "we're going to London first, you said. Shall we see that blind man there?"

She was about to answer "Heaven forbid!" but checked herself, and told him No, she thought not; why did he ask?

"He's a wise man," said Barnaby, with a thoughtful countenance. "I wish that we may meet with him again. What was it that he said of crowds? That gold was to be found where people crowded, and not among the trees, and in such quiet places? He spoke as if he loved it; London is a crowded place; I think we shall meet him there."

"But why do you desire to see him, love?" she asked.

"Because," said Barnaby, looking wistfully at her, "he talked to me about gold, which is a rare thing, and say what you will, a thing you would like to have, I know. And because he came and went away so strangely—just as white-headed old men come sometimes to my bed's foot in the night, and say what I can't remember when the bright day returns. He told me he'd come back. I wonder why he broke his word!"

"But you never thought of being rich or gay, before, dear Barnaby. You have always been contented."

He laughed and bade her say that again, then cried, "Ay ay—oh yes," and laughed once more. Then something passed that caught his fancy, and the topic wandered from his mind, and was succeeded by another just as fleeting.

But it was plain from what he had said, and from his returning to the point more than once that day, and on the next, that the blind man's visit, and indeed his words, had taken strong possession of his mind. Whether the idea of wealth had occurred to him for the first time on looking at the golden clouds that evening—and images were often presented to his thoughts by outward objects quite as remote and distant; or whether their poor and humble way of life had suggested it, by contrast, long ago; or whether the accident (as he would deem it) of the blind man's pursuing the current of his own remarks, had done so at the moment; or he had been impressed by the mere circumstance of the man being blind, and, therefore, unlike any one with whom he had talked before; it was impossible to tell. She tried every means to discover, but in vain; and the probability is that Barnaby himself was equally in the dark.

It filled her with uneasiness to find him harping on this string, but all that she could do, was to lead him quickly to some other subject, and to dismiss it from his brain. To caution him against their visitor, to show any fear or suspicion in reference to him, would only be, she feared, to increase that interest with which Barnaby regarded him, and to strengthen his desire to meet him once again. She hoped, by plunging into the crowd, to rid herself of her terrible pursuer; and then, by journeying to a distance and observing increased caution, if that were possible, to live again unknown, in secrecy and peace.

They reached, in course of time, their halting-place within ten miles of London, and lay there for the night, after bargaining to be carried on for a tride next day, in a light van which was returning empty, and was to start at five o'clock in the morning. The driver was punctual, the road good—save for the dust, the weather being very hot and dry—and at seven in the forenoon of Friday the second of June, one thousand seven hundred and eighty, they alighted at the foot of Westminster Bridge, bade their conductor farewell, and stood alone, together, on the searching pavement. For the freshness which night sheds upon such busy thoroughfares had already departed, and the sun was shining with uncommon lustre.
CHAPTER THE FORTY-EIGHTH.

UNCERTAIN where to go next, and bewildered by the crowd of people who were already astir, they sat down in one of the recesses on the bridge, to rest. They soon became aware that the stream of life was all pouring one way, and that a vast throng of persons were crossing the river from the Middlesex to the Surrey shore, in unusual haste and evident excitement. They were, for the most part, in knots of two or three, or sometimes half-a-dozen; they spoke little together—many of them were quite silent; and hurried on as if they had one absorbing object in view, which was common to them all.

They were surprised to see that nearly every man in this great concourse, which still came pouring past, without slackening in the least, wore in his hat a blue cockade; and that the chance passengers who were not so decorated, appeared timidly anxious to escape observation or attack, and gave them the wall as if they would conciliate them. This, however, was natural enough, considering their inferiority in point of numbers; for the proportion of those who wore blue cockades, to those who were dressed as usual, was at least forty or fifty to one. There was no quarrelling, however: the blue cockades went swarming on, passing each other when they could, and making all the speed that was possible in such a multitude; and exchanged nothing more than looks, and very often not even those, with such of the passers-by as were not of their number.

At first, the current of people had been confined to the two pathways, and but a few more eager stragglers kept the road. But after half an hour or so, the passage was completely blocked up by the great press, which, being now closely wedged together, and impeded by the carts and coaches it encountered, moved but slowly, and was sometimes at a stand for five or ten minutes together.

After the lapse of nearly two hours, the numbers began to diminish visibly, and gradually dwindling away, by little and little, left the bridge quite clear, save that, now and then, some hot and dusty man with the cockade in his hat, and his coat thrown over his shoulder, went panting by, fearful of being too late, or stopped to ask which way his friends had taken, and being directed, hastened on again like one refreshed. In this comparative solitude, which seemed quite strange and novel after the late crowd, the widow had for the first time an opportunity of inquiring of an old man who came and sat beside them, what was the meaning of that great assemblage.

"Why, where have you come from," he returned, "that you haven't heard of Lord George Gordon's great association? This is the day that he presents the petition against the Catholics, God bless him!"

"What have all these men to do with that?" she asked.

"What have they to do with it!" the old man replied. "Why, how you talk! Don't you know his Lordship has declared he won't present it to the house at all, unless it is attended to the door by forty thousand good and true men at least! There's a crowd for you!"

"A crowd indeed! said Barnaby. "Do you hear that, mother!"

"And they're mustering yonder, as I am told," resumed the old man, "nigh upon a hundred thousand strong. Ah! Let Lord George alone. He knows his power. There'll be a good many faces inside them three windows over there," and he pointed to where the House of Commons overlooked the river, "that'll turn pale when good Lord George gets up this afternoon, and with reason too. Ay, ay. Let his Lordship alone. Let him alone. He knows!"

And so, with much mumbling and chuckling and shaking of his forefinger, he rose, with the assistance of his stick, and tottered off.

"Mother!" said Barnaby, "that's a brave crowd he talks of. Come!"

"Not to join it!" cried his mother.

"Yes, yes," he answered, plucking at her sleeve. "Why not! Come!"

"You don't know," she urged, "what mischief they may do, where they may lead you, what their meaning is. Dear Barnaby, for my sake—"

"For your sake!" he cried, patting her hand. "Well! It is for your sake, mother. You remember what the blind man said, about the gold. Here's a brave crowd! Come! Or wait till I come back—yes, yes, wait here."

She tried with all the earnestness her fears engendered, to turn him from his purpose, but in vain. He was stooping down to buckle on his shoe, when a hackney-coach passed them rather quickly, and a voice inside called to the driver to stop.

"Young man," said a voice within. "Who's that?"

"Do you wear this ornament?" returned the stranger, holding out a blue cockade.

"In Heaven's name, no. Pray do not give it him!" exclaimed the widow.

"Speak for yourself, woman," said the man within the coach, coldly. "Leave the young man to his choice; he's old enough to make it, and to snap your apron-strings. He knows, without your telling, whether he wears the sign of a loyal Englishman or not."

Barnaby, trembling with impatience, cried "Yes! yes, yes, I do," as he had cried a dozen times already. The man threw him a cockade, and crying "Make haste to Saint George's Fields," ordered the coachman to drive on fast; and left them.

With hands that trembled with his eagerness to fix the bauble in his hat, Barnaby was adjusting it as he best could, and hurriedly replying to the tears and entreaties of his mother, when two gentlemen passed on the opposite side of the way. Observing them, and seeing how Barnaby was occupied, they stopped, whispered together for an instant, turned back, and came over to them.

"Why are you sitting here?" said one of them, who was dressed in a plain suit of black, wore long lank hair, and carried a great cane. "Why have you not gone with the rest?"

"I am going, sir," replied Barnaby, finishing his task, and putting his hat on with an air of pride. "I shall be there directly."

"Say my Lord, young man, when his Lordship does you the honour of speaking to you," said the second gentleman mildly. "If you don't know Lord George Gordon when you see him, it's high time you should."

"Nay, Gashford," said Lord George, as Barnaby pulled off his hat again and made him a low bow, "it's no great matter on a day like this, which every Englishman will remember with delight and pride. Put on your hat, friend, and follow us, for you lag behind and are late. It's past ten now. Didn't you know that the hour of assembling was ten o'clock?"

Barnaby shook his head and looked vacantly from one to the other. "You might have known it, friend" said Gashford, "it was perfectly understood. How came you to be so ill informed?"

"He cannot tell you, sir," the widow interposed. "It's of no use to ask him. We are but this morning come from a long distance in the country, and know nothing of these matters."

"The cause has taken a deep root, and has spread its branches far and wide," said Lord George to his secretary. "This is a pleasant hearing. I thank Heaven for it!"

"Amen!" cried Gashford with a solemn face.

"You do not understand me, my Lord," said the widow. "Pardon me, but you cruelly mistake my meaning. We know nothing of these matters. We have no desire or right to join in what you are about to do. This is my son, my poor afflicted son, dearer to me than my own life. In mercy's name, my Lord, go your way alone, and do not tempt him into danger!"

"My good woman," said Gashford, "how can you!—Dear me!—What do you mean by tempting, and by danger! Do you think his Lordship is a roaring lion, going about and seeking whom he may devour? God bless me!"

"No, no, my Lord, forgive me," implored the widow, laying both her hands upon his breast, and scarcely knowing what she did, or said, in the earnestness of her supplication, "but there are reasons why you should hear my earnest, mother's prayer, and leave my son with me. Oh do! He is not in his right senses, he is not, indeed!"

"It is a bad sign of the wickedness of these times," said Lord George, evading her touch, and colouring deeply, "that those who cling to the truth and support the right cause, are set down as mad. Have you the heart to say this of your own son, unnatural mother?"

"I am astonished at you!" said Gashford, with a kind of meek severity. "This is a very sad picture of female depravity."

"He has surely no appearance," said Lord George, glancing at Barnaby, and whispering in his secretary's ear, "of being deranged! And even if he had, we must not construe any trifling peculiarity into madness. Which of us"—and here he turned red again—"would be safe, if that were made the law!"

"Not one," replied the secretary; "in that case, the greater the zeal, the truth, and talent; the more direct the call from above; the clearer would be the madness. With regard to this young man, my Lord," he added, with a lip that slightly curled as he looked at Barnaby, who stood twirling his hat, and stealthily beckoning them to come away, "he is as sensible and self-possessed as any one I ever saw."

"And you desire to make one of this great body?" said Lord George, addressing him; "and intended to make one, did you?"

"Yes—yes," said Barnaby, with sparkling eyes. "To be sure I did! I told her so myself."

"I see," replied Lord George, with a reproachful glance at the unhappy mother. "I thought so. Follow me and this gentleman, and you shall have your wish."

Barnaby kissed his mother tenderly on the cheek, and bidding her be of good cheer, for their fortunes were both made now, did as he was desired. She, poor woman, followed too—with how much fear and grief it would be hard to tell.

They passed quickly through the Bridge-road, where the shops were all shut up (for the passage of the great crowd and the expectation of their return had alarmed the tradesmen for their goods and windows), and where, in the upper stories, all the inhabitants were congregated, looking down into the street below, with faces variously expressive of alarm, interest, expectancy, and indignation. Some of these applauded, and some hissed; but regardless of these interruptions—for the noise of a vast congregation of people at a little distance, sounded in his ears like the roaring of a sea—Lord George Gordon quickened his pace, and presently arrived before St. George's Fields.

They were really fields at that time, and of considerable extent. Here an immense multitude was collected, bearing flags of various kinds and sizes, but all of the same colour—blue, like the cockades—some sections marching to and fro in military array, and others drawn up in circles, squares, and lines. A large portion, both of the bodies which paraded the ground, and of those which remained stationary, were occupied in singing hymns or psalms. With whomsoever this originated, it was well done; for the sound of so many thousand voices in the air must have stirred the heart of any man within him, and could not fail to have a wonderful effect upon enthusiasts, however mistaken.
Scouts had been posted in advance of the great body, to give notice of their leader's coming. These falling back, the word was quickly passed through the whole host, and for a short interval there ensued a profound and death-like silence, during which the mass was so still and quiet, that the fluttering of a banner caught the eye, and became a circumstance of note. Then they burst into a tremendous shout, into another, and another; and the air seemed rent and shaken, as if by the discharge of cannon.

"Gashford!" cried Lord George, pressing his secretary's arm tight within his own, and speaking with as much emotion in his voice, as in his altered face, "I am called indeed, now. I feel and know it. I am the leader of a host. If they summoned me at this moment with one voice to lead them on to death, I'd do it—Yes, and fall first myself!"

"It is a proud sight," said the secretary. "It is a noble day for England, and for the great cause throughout the world. Such homage, my Lord, as I, an humble but devoted man, can render—"

"What are you doing!" cried his master, catching him by both hands;
for he had made a show of kneeling at his feet; "Do not unfit me, dear Gash­ ford, for the solemn duty of this glorious day—" the tears stood in the eyes of the poor gentleman as he said the words. "Let us go among them; we have to find a place in some division for this new recruit—give me your hand."

Gashford slid his cold insidious palm into his master's grasp, and so, hand in hand, and followed still by Barnaby and by his mother too, they mingled with the concourse.

They had by this time taken to their singing again, and as their leader passed between their ranks, they raised their voices to their utmost. Many of those who were banded together to support the religion of their country, even unto death, had never heard a hymn or psalm in all their lives. But these fellows having for the most part strong lungs, and being naturally fond of singing, chanted any ribaldry or nonsense that occurred to them, feeling pretty certain that it would not be detected in the general chorus, and not caring very much if it were. Many of these voluntaries were sung under the very nose of Lord George Gordon, who, quite unconscious of their burden, passed on with his usual stiff and solemn deportment, very much edified and delighted by the pious conduct of his followers.

So they went on and on, up this line, down that, round the exterior of this circle, and on every side of that hollow square; and still there were lines, and squares, and circles out of number to review. The day being now intensely hot, and the sun striking down his fiercest rays upon the field, those who carried heavy banners began to grow faint and weary; most of the number assembled were fain to pull off their neckcloths, and throw their coats and waistcoats open; and some, towards the centre, quite overpowered by the excessive heat, which was of course rendered more unendurable by the multitude around them, lay down upon the grass, and offered all they had about them for a drink of water. Still, no man left the ground, not even of those who were so distressed; still Lord George, streaming from every pore, went on with Gashford; and still Barnaby and his mother followed close behind them.

They had arrived at the top of a long line of some eighty men in single file, and Lord George had turned his head to look back, when a loud cry of recognition—in that peculiar and half-stifled tone which a voice has, when it is raised in the open air and in the midst of a great concourse of persons—was heard, and a man stepped with a shout of laughter from the rank, and smote Barnaby on the shoulders with his heavy hand.

"How now!" he cried. "Barnaby Rudge! Why, where have you been hiding for these hundred years?"

Barnaby had been thinking within himself that the smell of the trodden grass brought back his old days at cricket, when he was a young boy and played on Chigwell Green. Confused by this sudden and boisterous address, he stared in a bewildered manner at the man, and could scarcely say "What? Hugh!"

"Hugh!" echoed the other; "ay, Hugh—Maypole Hugh! You remember my dog? He's alive now, and will know you, I warrant. What, you wear the colour, do you? Well done! Ha ha ha!"

"You know this young man, I see," said Lord George.

"Know him, my Lord! as well as I know my own right hand. My captain knows him. We all know him."

"Will you take him into your division?"

"It hasn't in it a better, nor a nimbler, nor a more active man, than Barnaby Rudge," said Hugh. "Show me the man who says it has. Fall in, Barnaby. He shall march, my Lord, between me and Dennis; and he shall carry," he added, taking a flag from the hand of a tired man who tendered it, "the gayest silken streamer in this valiant army."

"In the name of God, no!" shrieked the widow, darting forward. "Barnaby—my Lord—see—he'll come back—Barnaby—Barnaby!"

"Women in the field!" cried Hugh, stepping between them, and holding her off. "Holloa! My captain there!"

"What's the matter here?" cried Simon Tappertit, bustling up in a great heat. "Do you call this order?"

"Nothing like it, captain," answered Hugh, still holding her back with his outstretched hand. "It's against all orders. Ladies are carrying off our gallant soldiers from their duty. The word of command, captain! They're filing off the ground. Quick!"

"Close!" cried Simon, with the whole power of his lungs. "Form! March!"

She was thrown to the ground; the whole field was in motion; Barnaby was whirled away into the heart of a dense mass of men, and she saw him no more.
THOS. HARRIS & SON'S

ACROMATIC TELESCOPES.

Warranted by any other house at the prices. On receiving a remittance, telegraph shall be sent, CARRIAGE FREE, TO ANY PART OF THE KINGDOM, and exchanged if not approved. No hour or season visitor should be without one.

A pocket telescope to show objects 3 miles off, 18s. 6d.
A pocket telescope to show objects 10 miles off, 2 L. 10s. 6d.
A pocket telescope to show objects 20 miles off, 3 L. 12s. 6d.

THIS HARRIS & SON, Opticians to the Royal Family, No. 55, opposite the British Museum, London, established 60 years. Recommend, and not related to, Mr. William Strange, 21, Paternoster-row; 118, Fleet Street.—Inventor, Jos. A. Amstrong, of London, W.

Price 26s. 6d., post-free 6d. extra, never before published,
A GUIDE TO ONE HUNDRED SOCIETIES FOR LENDING MONEY, ON PERSONAL SECURITY ALONE.

MANUFACTURERS TO H.R. ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

RIDING WHIPS, from Five Shillings to Ten Guineas each, at W. & J. SANGSTER, 146, Regent Street, and 14, Fleet Street.—Invented by a Poet of Jersey, W. WEBB.

PATENT BODY SUPPORTS, or STAYS SUITED TO THE VARIOUS CONDITIONS OF THE BODY IN THE SINGLE AND MARRIED STATE.

Price 26s. 6d., post-free 6d. extra, never before published,
A GUIDE TO ONE HUNDRED SOCIETIES FOR LENDING MONEY, ON PERSONAL SECURITY ALONE.

BALSAM OF ROSES FOR PRESERVING THE GROWTH OF THE HAIR.

This Balsam is prepared principally from Roses, from which it derives its power, and is recommended to all gentlemen and ladies, particularly adapted to the nourishing and strengthening the Hair. By its use, Hair, which has been impaired in quality, colour, or appearance, by sickness or change of climate, or by any other cause of premature decay, will be restored to all its strength and beauty.

Manufactured and Sold by BIRD, REES & BIRD, Regent Street, and BIRD, 23, New Bond Street. Price 3s. 6d. each 1 oz., 10s. per box.

PRACTICAL REMARKS ON DEFORMITIES AND WEAKNESS OF THE Joints, MUSCULAR CONTRACTIONS, AND MUSCULAR WEAKNESS, General and Partial. By THOS. HARRIS, Optician to the Prince of Wales, 118, Fleet Street, Portland Port, slone stages of this splendid work are cut, where the author's treatment in detail, especially in the deformities of the Spine and Chest, on the subject of posture, and the school of the necessary particulars.

Published by Longman & Co., in 4to, with Plates and Cases, price £1 10s. 6d.

PRACTICAL REMARKS ON FRACTURES OF THE TRUNK & EXTREMITIES, with Plates & Cases, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 6d.

Our volume, 12mo, nearly bound, gilt edges, 4s.

FLEURS DE POESIE MODERNE;
CONTAINING THE BEAUTIES OF A. DE LAMARTINE, VICTOR HUGO, DE BERANGER, C. DELAVIGNE.

LONDON : CHAPMAN & HALL, 186, STRAND. Sold by all Booksellers.

HEWETSON'S CREAM-PRODUCING MILK-PAN,
SOLD AT HEWETSON'S ZINK MANUFACTORY, 57, CANNON-STREET, near LONDON BRIDGE, LONDON.

This high-priced Metal is rapidly superseding the use of Brass Plates, owing to the superior contrast which the white metal per superficial inch, according to the quantity and style of engraving. A design for these engraved will be sent gratis, to any person forwarding the necessary particulars. Money received by the post will be acknowledged, and the order executed the same day. Hewetson, Zink Warehouse, 57, Cannon-street, near London Bridge, where Builders and Plumbers are supplied with every article in the trade on cash terms.

HEWETSON'S ZINK DOOR AND WINDOW PLATES.

This highly-priced Metal is rapidly superseding the use of Brass Plates, owing to the superior contrast which the white metal per superficial inch, according to the quantity and style of engraving. A design for these engraved will be sent gratis, to any person forwarding the necessary particulars. Money received by the post will be acknowledged, and the order executed the same day. Hewetson, Zink Warehouse, 57, Cannon-street, near London Bridge, where Builders and Plumbers are supplied with every article in the trade on cash terms.

HEWETSON'S CREAM-PRODUCING MILK-PAN,
SOLD AT HEWETSON'S ZINK MANUFACTORY, 57, CANNON-STREET, near LONDON BRIDGE, LONDON.

This high-priced Metal is rapidly superseding the use of Brass Plates, owing to the superior contrast which the white metal per superficial inch, according to the quantity and style of engraving. A design for these engraved will be sent gratis, to any person forwarding the necessary particulars. Money received by the post will be acknowledged, and the order executed the same day. Hewetson, Zink Warehouse, 57, Cannon-street, near London Bridge, where Builders and Plumbers are supplied with every article in the trade on cash terms.

HEWETSON'S ZINK DOOR AND WINDOW PLATES.

This highly-priced Metal is rapidly superseding the use of Brass Plates, owing to the superior contrast which the white metal per superficial inch, according to the quantity and style of engraving. A design for these engraved will be sent gratis, to any person forwarding the necessary particulars. Money received by the post will be acknowledged, and the order executed the same day. Hewetson, Zink Warehouse, 57, Cannon-street, near London Bridge, where Builders and Plumbers are supplied with every article in the trade on cash terms.

HEWETSON'S CREAM-PRODUCING MILK-PAN,
SOLD AT HEWETSON'S ZINK MANUFACTORY, 57, CANNON-STREET, near LONDON BRIDGE, LONDON.

This high-priced Metal is rapidly superseding the use of Brass Plates, owing to the superior contrast which the white metal per superficial inch, according to the quantity and style of engraving. A design for these engraved will be sent gratis, to any person forwarding the necessary particulars. Money received by the post will be acknowledged, and the order executed the same day. Hewetson, Zink Warehouse, 57, Cannon-street, near London Bridge, where Builders and Plumbers are supplied with every article in the trade on cash terms.

HEWETSON'S ZINK DOOR AND WINDOW PLATES.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

Price 3s. 6d., handsomely bound, (post-free 1s. extra), correct to July 1st, 1827.

THE VISITOR'S GUIDE TO THE WATERING-PLACES.

Describing every object of Interest and Attraction at the various places of Summer resort.

PUBLISHED BY W. BRITTAIN, 11, PATERNOSTER ROW.

NOW READY, VOL. I, PRICE SIX SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

THE LONDON SATURDAY JOURNAL,

PICTORIAL SERIES.

Conducted by James Grant, Author of "Random Reconstructions," "The Great Metropolis," &c., and Francis Ross, formerly sole Editor of the Journal.

The London Saturday Journal, which has occupied so high a place in public estimation ever since its commencement, and which has been rapidly rising in circulation since the beginning of the present year, when a new and Pictorial Series commenced, now publish, handsomely printed in moral size, price 1s., to be completed in Twelve Monthly Parts.

THE ROYAL ACADEMICAL;
or,

PROGRESSIVE DRAWING-BOOK.

This Work is intended for the Use of the Young Student and Amateur, and to furnish them with Instruction and Assistance, to which they may conveniently refer in the absence of a Master.
Each Part will contain Four Lithographic Drawings, consisting of Engravings from the earliest examples of a finished drawing; accompanied with plain and full instructions in the several Arts of Drawing the Human Figure, Landscapes, Animals, Shipping, &c.;

THE LIFE OF JACK TENCH;
or,
The Mischiefman Turned Idol.

This Original work is published in Weekly Numbers at 3d, each Number containing an embellishment on Steel, and Vignettes on Wood, effected in a wrapper, and in Monthly Parts at 1s., each containing as pages of superior letter-press, handsomely printed in open type, with Three Steel illustrations and numerous Vignettes, executed only by Master Hand; while the accompanying matter will embrace a delightful account of his servitude as a Mischiefman, cooperating with his Travels and Exploits in various countries, all of which will be given in a highly amusing and historical. By Snows, the author of great eminence.

Now publishing, handsomely printed in moral size, price 1s., to be completed in Twelve Monthly Parts.

THE LONDON SATURDAY JOURNAL,

LADIES' ELEGANT RIDING HABITS.

Sunbonnet Cloth Coats .................................. 1 6

Cashmere Cloths ........................................ 1 6

GENTLEMEN'S

Strawberry Alarm Coats ................................ 2 7

Extra Cashmere, the best that is made ............ 2 10

Rederected Cashmere, Silk Facings .......... 3 4

Blackaide Complaints ................................. 1 10

New Fulters', Summer Trousers, 16. 6d. per pair, or three ... 1 10

Summer Trousers, 7/4, or Three ................ 1 10

Silk Valencian Waistcoats, 16. 6d. each, or three ... 1 10

Suet Shawl Coat ........................................ 3 30

CONTRACTS BY THE YEAR.

Organized by E. P. D. & Son, are universally adopted by Gentlemen and Professional Gentlemen, in being more regular and econom.

The Price is the lowest ever known.

Two guineas per Year. Superiors .... 2 10

Extra cashmere, the best finished made .... 3 10

Three Suits per year ................................ 10 10

Four Suits per year ................................ 14 10

Extra Cashmere, ditto.............................. 12 10

Extra Cashmere, ditto.............................. 15 10

THE LONDON SATURDAY JOURNAL,

SHOOTING WAISTCOATS, CAITERS, & MUD BOOTS.

FIRST-RATE

Boys' Clothing.

Skeleton Dresses ................................... 6 11

Tunics and House Suits .......................... 1 10

Caynet Cloaks ..................................... 6 10

GENTLEMEN'S

Morning Coats and Dressing Gowns ............ 2 15

Camlet Cloak, lined all through ................... 1 10

Cloth Opera Cloak ................................ 1 15

Army Cloth Blue Spanish Cloak .................. 1 7

Turk's round ........................................ 3 10

Super Cloth, ditto ................................ 3 30

Caynet Tewd Fishing Trouses ..................... 6 10

Suit Livery, complete ................................ 3 10

COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

Prefering these Clothes fashionable made, in a FIRST-RATE LONDON HOUSE, are respectfully informed, that by a good-paid Manufacturer, they will receive a Prospectus explanatory of the System of Business, illustrated with Measurements, and a Statement of Prices. Or if Three or Four Gentlemen will be ca-noned, the Cloths will be sent immediately to them.

SPORTSMEN FULLY EQUIPPED.

49, LOMBARD STREET.