Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 71

Charles Dickens
No. 71. Price 3d.

MASTER WIMPFIRED'S CLOCK

BY "BOZ."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 7, 1841.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS BY C. Cattermole & H. K. Browne.

BARNABY RUDGE.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND; PRINTERS, WÖTFFIELD.

[Address and distribution details provided, including publishers and booksellers.]
ADVERTISEMENTS.

WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS.

Handsomely bound in cloth, with edges marbled, price 8s. each, the First and Second Volumes of

MASTER HUMPHREY'S CLOCK.

With Illustrations by C. Cattermole and Hablot Browne.

In Three Volumes, post octavo, price 15s. cloth,

OLIVER TWIST.

With an Introduction by the Author.

Each in One Volume octavo, price 6d. in cloth, 12. 1s.

NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.

With Illustrations by Phiz.

And a Portrait of the Author, engraved by Finden, from a Painting by D. Marlow, A.R.A.

THE PICKWICK PAPERS.

With Forty-Three Illustrations by "Phiz."

Sketches by "Boz."

A New Edition.

Comprising both the Series.

With Forty Illustrations by G. Cruikshank.

Eighth Edition. In One Volume, small two, price 3s. boards,

SKETCHES OF YOUNG LADIES.

With Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

Fifth Edition. In One Volume, small two, price 3s. boards,

SKETCHES OF YOUNG CENTLEMEN.

With Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

In One Volume, small two, price 3s. boards.

SKETCHES OF YOUNG COUPLES.

By the Author of "Sketches of Young Gentlemen."

With Six Illustrations by "Phiz."

One volume, 12mo, neatly bound, gilt edges, price 4s.

FLEURS DE POESIE MODERNE;

CONTAINING

THE BEAUTIES OF A. DE LAMARTINE, VICTOR HUGO, DE BERANGER, C. DELAVIGNE.

Just published, price Two Shillings and Sixpence,

WRITTEN CARICATURES;

A SKETCH OF PERIPATETIC PHILOSOPHY.

FROM HINTS IN THE PARIS CHARIVARI.

WITH FORTY-FOUR ILLUSTRATIONS, BY J. LEECH.

"Humorously written, and capitaly illustrated. There is much quaint, quiet, undeniably funny in this little book."—Sunday Times.

In one volume, small 8vo, price 5s. 6d.

SONGS AND BALLADS.

By SAMUEL LOVER.

These popular Lyrics, including the celebrated "Superstitions of Ireland," are now, for the first time, collected and revised by the Author.

One volume, royal 16mo, neatly bound, price 5s. 6d.

CHESS FOR BEGINNERS;

IN A SERIES OF PROGRESSIVE LESSONS,

SHOWING THE MOST APPROVED METHODS OF BEGINNING AND ENDING THE GAME, TOGETHER WITH VARIOUS SITUATIONS AND CHECK-MATES.

By WILLIAM LEWIS, AUTHOR OF SEVERAL WORKS ON THE GAME.

WITH TWENTY-FOUR DIAGRAMS PRINTED IN COLOURS. SECOND EDITION, CORRECTED.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 185, STRAND. And sold by all Booksellers in Town and Country.
CHAPTER THE FORTY-NINTH.

The mob had been divided from its first assemblage into four divisions; the London, the Westminster, the Southwark, and the Scotch. Each of these divisions being subdivided into various bodies, and these bodies being drawn up in various forms and figures, the general arrangement was, except to the few chiefs and leaders, as unintelligible as the plan of a great battle to the meanest soldier in the field. It was not without its method, however; for, in a very short space of time after being put in motion, the crowd had resolved itself into three great parties, and were prepared, as had been arranged, to cross the river by different bridges, and make for the House of Commons in separate detachments.

At the head of that division which had Westminster Bridge for its approach to the scene of action, Lord George Gordon took his post; with Gashford at his right hand, and sundry ruffians, of most unpromising appearance, forming a kind of staff about him. The conduct of a second party, whose route lay by Blackfriars, was entrusted to a committee of management, including perhaps a dozen men; while the third, which was to go by London Bridge, and through the main streets, in order that their numbers and their serious intentions might be the better known and appreciated by the citizens, were led by Simon Tappertit (assisted by a few subalterns, selected from the Brotherhood of United Bull-men), Dennis the hangman, Hugh, and some others.

The word of command being given, each of these great bodies took the road assigned to it, and departed on its way, in perfect order and profound silence. That which went through the City greatly exceeded the others in number, and was of such prodigious extent that when the rear began to move, the front was nearly four miles in advance, notwithstanding that the men marched three abreast and followed very close upon each other.

At the head of this party, in the place where Hugh, in the madness of his humour, had stationed him, and walking between that dangerous companion and the hangman, went Barnaby; as many a man among the thousands who looked on that day afterwards remembered well. Forgetful of all other things in the ecstacy of the moment, his face flushed and his eyes sparkling with delight, heedless of the weight of the great banner he carried, and mindful only of its flashing in the sun and rustling in the summer breeze, on he went, proud, happy, elated past all telling:—the only light-hearted, undesigning creature, in the whole assembly.

"What do you think of this?" asked Hugh, as they passed through the crowded streets, and looked up at the windows which were thronged with spectators. "They have all turned out to see our flags and streamers! Eh, Barnaby! Why, Barnaby's the greatest man of all the pack! His flag's the largest of the lot, the brightest too. There's nothing in the show, like Barnaby. All eyes are turned on him. Ha ha ha!"

"Don't make that din, brother," growled the hangman, glancing with no very approving eyes at Barnaby as he spoke: "I hope he don't think there's nothing to be done, but carrying there piece of blue rag, like a boy at a breaking-up. You're ready for action I hope, eh? You, I mean," he added, nudging Barnaby roughly with his elbow. "What are you staring at? Why don't you speak?"

Barnaby had been gazing at his flag; and looked vacantly from his questioner to Hugh.

"He don't understand your way," said the latter. "Here, I'll explain it to him. Barnaby old boy, attend to me."

"I'll attend," said Barnaby, looking anxiously round; "but I wish I could see her somewhere."

"See who?" demanded Dennis in a gruff tone. "You ain't in love I hope, brother? That ain't the sort of thing for us, you know. We mustn't have no love here."

"She would be proud indeed to see me now, eh Hugh?" said Barnaby. "Wouldn't it make her glad to see me at the head of this large show? She'd cry with joy, I know she would. Where can she be. She never sees me at my best, and what do I care to be gay and fine if she's not by?"

"Why, what palaver's this?" asked Mr. Dennis with supreme disdain. "We ain't got no sentimental members among us, I hope."
"Don't be uneasy, brother," cried Hugh, "he's only talking of his mother."
"Of his what?" said Mr. Dennis with a strong oath.
"His mother."
"And have I combined myself with this here section, and turned out on this here memorable day, to hear men talk about their mothers!" growled Mr. Dennis with extreme disgust. "The notion of a man's sweetheart's bad enough, but a man's mother!—" and here his disgust was so extreme that he spat upon the ground, and could say no more.
"Barnaby's right," cried Hugh with a grin, "and I say it. Look, bold lad. If she's not here to see, it's because I've provided for her, and sent half a dozen gentlemen, every one of 'em with a blue flag (but not half as fine as yours), to take her, in state, to a grand house all hung round with gold and silver banners, and everything else you please, where she'll wait till you come, and want for nothing."
"Ay!" said Barnaby, his face beaming with delight: "have you indeed? That's a good hearing. That's fine! Kind Hugh!"
"But nothing to what will come, bless you," retorted Hugh, with a wink at Dennis, who regarded his new companion in arms with great astonishment.
"No, indeed?" cried Barnaby.
"Nothing at all," said Hugh. "Money, cocked hats and feathers, red coats and gold lace; all the fine things there are, ever were, or will be; will belong to us if we are true to that noble gentleman—the best man in the world, carry our flags for a few days, and keep 'em safe. That's all we've got to do."
"Is that all?" cried Barnaby with glistening eyes, as he clutched his pole the tighter; "I warrant you I keep this one safe, then. You have put it in good hands. You know me, Hugh. Nobody shall wrest this flag away."
"Well said!" cried Hugh. "Ha ha! Nobly said! That's the old stout Barnaby, that I have climbed and leaped with many and many a day—I knew I was not mistaken in Barnaby.—Don't you see man," he added in a whisper, as he slipped to the other side of Dennis, "that the lad's a natural, and can be got to do anything, if you take him the right way. Letting alone the fun he is, he's worth a dozen men, in earnest, as you'd find if you tried a fall with him. Leave him to me. You shall soon see whether he's of use or not."
Mr. Dennis received these explanatory remarks with many nods and winks, and softened his behaviour towards Barnaby from that moment. Hugh, laying his finger on his nose, stepped back into his former place, and they proceeded in silence.
It was between two and three o'clock in the afternoon when the three great parties met at Westminster, and, uniting into one huge mass, raised a tremendous shout. This was not only done in token of their presence, but as a signal to those on whom the task devolved, that it was time to take possession of the lobbies of both Houses, and of the various avenues of approach, and of the gallery stairs. To the last-named place, Hugh and Dennis, still with their pupil between them, rushed straightway: Barnaby having given his flag into the hands of one of their own party, who kept them at the outer door.
Their followers pressing on behind, they were borne as on a great wave to the very doors of the gallery, whence it was impossible to retreat, even if they had been so inclined, by reason of the throng which choked up the passages. It is a familiar expression in describing a great crowd, that a person might have walked upon the people's heads. In this case it was actually done; for a boy who had by some means got among the concourse, and was in imminent danger of suffocation, climbed to the shoulders of a man beside him and walked upon the people's hats and heads into the open street; traversing in his passage the whole length of two staircases and a long gallery. Nor was the swarm without less dense; for a basket which had been tossed into the crowd, was jerked from head to head, and shoulder to shoulder, and went spinning and whirling on above them, until it was lost to view, without ever once falling in among them or coming near the ground.

Through this vast throng, sprinkled doubtless here and there with honest zealots, but composed for the most part of the very scum and refuse of London, whose growth was fostered by bad criminal laws, bad prison regulations, and the worst conceivable police,—such of the members of both Houses of Parliament as had not taken the precaution to be already at their posts, were compelled to fight and force their way. Their carriages were stopped and broken; the wheels wrenched off; the glasses shattered to atoms; the panels beaten in; drivers, footmen, and masters, pulled from their seats and rolled in the mud. Lords, commoners, and reverend Bishops, with little distinction of person or party, were kicked and pinched and hustled; passed from hand to hand through various stages of ill-usage; and sent to their fellow senators at last with their clothes hanging in ribands about them, their bagwigs torn off, themselves speechless and breathless, and their persons covered with the powder which had been cuffed and beaten out of their hair. One Lord was so long in the hands of the populace, that the Peers as a body resolved to sally forth and rescue him, and were in the act of doing so, when he happily appeared among them covered with dirt and bruises, and hardly to be recognized by those who knew him best. The noise and uproar were on the increase every moment. The air was filled with excreations, hoots, and howlings. The mob raged and roared, like a mad monster as it was, unceasingly, and each new outrage served to swell its fury.

Within doors, matters were even yet more threatening. Lord George—preceded by a man who carried the immense petition on a porter's knot through the lobby to the door of the House of Commons, where it was received by two officers of the house who rolled it up to the table ready for presentation—had taken his seat at an early hour, before the Speaker went to prayers. His followers pouring in at the same time, the lobby and all the avenues were immediately filled, as we have seen: thus the members were not only attacked in their passage through the streets, but were set upon within the very walls of Parliament; while the tumult, both within and without, was so great, that those who attempted to speak could scarcely hear their own voices; far less consult upon the course it would be wise to take in such extremity, or animate each other to dignified and firm resistance. So
BARNABY RUDGE.

Barnaby, Hugh, and Dennis were posted. There were two flights, short, steep, and narrow, running parallel to each other, and leading to two little doors communicating with a low passage which opened on the gallery. Between them was a kind of well, or unglazed skylight, for the admission of light and air into the lobby, which might be some eighteen or twenty feet below.

Upon one of these little staircases—not that at the head of which Lord George appeared from time to time, but the other—Gashford stood with his elbow on the bannister, and his cheek resting on his hand, with his usual crafty aspect. Whenever he varied this attitude in the slightest degree—so much as by the gentlest motion of his arm—the uproar was certain to increase, not merely there, but in the lobby below; from which place no doubt, some man who acted as fagelman to the rest, was constantly looking up and watching him.

"Order!" cried Hugh, in a voice which made itself heard even above the roar and tumult, as Lord George appeared at the top of the staircase.

"News! News from my Lord!"

The noise continued, notwithstanding his appearance, until Gashford looked round. There was silence immediately—even among the people in the passages without, and on the other staircases, who could neither see nor hear, but to whom, notwithstanding, the signal was conveyed with marvellous rapidity.

"Gentlemen!" said Lord George, who was very pale and agitated. "We must be firm. They talk of delays, but we must have no delays. They talk of taking your petition into consideration next Tuesday, but we must have it considered now. Present appearances look bad for our success, but we must succeed and will!"

"We must succeed and will!" echoed the crowd. And so among their shouts and cheers and other cries, he bowed to them and retired, and presently came back again. There was another gesture from Gashford, and a dead silence directly.

"I am afraid," he said, this time, "that we have little reason, gentlemen, to hope for any redress from the proceedings of Parliament. But we must redress our own grievances, we must meet again, we must put our trust in Providence, and it will bless our endeavours."

This speech being a little more temperate than the last, was not so favourably received. When the noise and exasperation were at their height, he came back once more, and told them that the alarm had gone forth for many miles round; that when the King heard of their assembling together in that great body, he had no doubt His Majesty would send down private orders to have their wishes complied with; and—with the manner of his speech as childish, irresolute, and uncertain as his matter—was proceeding further, when two gentlemen suddenly appeared at the door where he stood, and pressing past him and coming a step or two lower down upon the stairs, confronted the people.

The boldness of this action quite took them by surprise. They were not the less disconcerted, when one of the gentlemen, turning to Lord George, spoke thus—in a loud voice that they might hear him well, but quite coolly and collectedly.

"You may tell these people, if you please, my Lord, that I am General Conway of whom they have heard; and that I oppose this petition, and all their proceedings, and yours. I am a soldier, you may tell them; and I will protect the freedom of this place with my sword. You see, my Lord, that the members of this house are all in arms to-day; you know that the entrance to it is a narrow one; you cannot be ignorant that there are men within these walls who are determined to defend that pass to the last, and before whom many lives must fall if your adherents persevere. Have a care what you do."

"And my Lord George," said the other gentleman, addressing him in like manner, "I desire them to hear this, from me—Colonel Gordon—your near relation. If a man among this crowd, whose uproar strikes us deaf, crosses the threshold of the House of Commons, I swear to run my sword at that moment—not into his, but into your body!"

With that, they stepped back again, keeping their faces towards the crowd; took each an arm of the misguided nobleman; drew him into the passage, and shut the door; which they directly locked and fastened on the inside.

This was so quickly done, and the demeanour of both gentlemen—who were not young men either—was so gallant and resolute, that the crowd faltered and stared at each other with irresolute and timid looks. Many tried to turn towards the door; some of the faintest-hearted cried that they had best go back, and called to those behind to give way; and the panic and confusion were increasing rapidly, when Gashford whispered Hugh.

"What now!" Hugh roared aloud, turning towards them. "Why go back! Where can you do better than here, boys! One good rush against these doors and one below at the same time, will do the business. Rush on, then! As to the door below, let those stand back who are afraid. Let those who are not afraid, try who shall be the first to pass it. Here goes! Look out down there!"

Without the delay of an instant, he threw himself headlong over the bannisters into the lobby below. He had hardly touched the ground when Barnaby was at his side. The chaplain’s assistant, and some members who were imploring the people to retire, immediately withdrew; and then, with a great shout, both crowds threw themselves against the doors pell-mell, and besieged the House in earnest.

At that moment, when a second onset must have brought them into collision with those who stood on the defensive within, in which case great loss of life and bloodshed would inevitably have ensued,—the hindmost portion of the crowd gave way, and the rumour spread from mouth to mouth that a messenger had been despatched by water for the military, who were forming in the street. Fearful of sustaining a charge in the narrow passages in which they were so closely wedged together, the throng poured out as impetuously as they had flocked in. As the whole stream turned at once, Barnaby and Hugh went with it; and so, fighting and struggling and trampling on fallen men and being trampled on in turn themselves, they and the whole mass floated by degrees into the open street, where a large detachment of the Guards, both horse and foot, came hurrying up; clearing the ground before them so rapidly that the people seemed to melt away as they advanced.

The word of command to halt being given, the soldiers formed across the street; the rioters, breathless and exhausted with their late exertions, formed likewise, though in a very irregular and disorderly manner. The commanding officer rode hastily into the open space between the two bodies, accompanied by a magistrate and an officer of the House of Commons, for whose accommodation a couple of troopers had hastily dismounted. The Riot Act was read, but not a man stirred.

In the first rank of the insurgents, Barnaby and Hugh stood side by side. Somebody had thrust into Barnaby’s hands when he came out into the street, his precious flag; which, being now rolled up and tied round the pole, looked like a giant quarter-staff as he grasped it firmly and stood upon his guard. If ever man believed with his whole heart and soul that he was engaged in a just cause, and that he was bound to stand by his leader to the last, poor Barnaby believed it of himself and Lord George Gordon.

After an ineffectual attempt to make himself heard, the magistrate gave the word and the Horse Guards came riding in among the crowd. But even then he galloped here and there, exhorting the people to disperse; and, although heavy stones were thrown at the men, and some were desperately cut and bruised, they had no orders but to make prisoners of such of the rioters as were the most active, and to drive the people back with the flat of their sabres. As the horses came in among them, the throng gave way at many points, and the Guards, following up their advantage, were rapidly clearing the ground, when two or three of the foremost, who were in a manner cut off from the rest by the people closing round them, made straight towards Barnaby and Hugh, who had no doubt been pointed out as the two men who dropped into the lobby; laying about them now with some effect, and inflicting on the more turbulent of their opponents, a few slight flesh wounds, under the influence of which a man dropped, here and there, into the arms of his fellows, amid much groaning and confusion.

At the sight of gashed and bloody faces, seen for a moment in the crowd, then hidden by the press around them, Barnaby turned pale and sick. But he stood his ground, and grasping his pole more firmly yet, kept his eye fixed upon the nearest soldier—nodding his head meanwhile, as Hugh, with a scowling visage, whispered in his ear.

The soldier came spurring on, making his horse rear as the people pressed about him, cutting at the hands of those who would have grasped his rein and forced his charger back, and waving to his comrades to follow—and still Barnaby, without retreating an inch, waited for his coming. Some called to him to fly, and some were in the very act of closing round him, to prevent his being taken, when the pole swept the air above the people's heads, and the man's saddle was empty in an instant.

Then he and Hugh turned and fled; the crowd opening to let them pass, and closing up again so quickly that there was no clue to the course they had taken. Panting for breath, hot, dusty, and exhausted with fatigue, they reached the river-side in safety, and getting into a boat with all despatch were soon out of any immediate danger.

As they glided down the river, they plainly heard the people cheering; and supposing they might have forced the soldiers to retreat, lay upon their oars for a few minutes, uncertain whether to return or not. But the crowd passing along Westminster Bridge, soon assured them that the populace were dispersing; and Hugh rightly guessed from this, that they had cheered the magistrate for offering to dismiss the military on condition of their immediate departure to their several homes; and that he and Barnaby were better where they were. He advised, therefore, that they should proceed to Blackfriars, and, going ashore at the bridge, make the best of their way to the Boot; where there was not only good entertainment and safe lodging, but where they would certainly be joined by many of their late companions. Barnaby assenting, they decided on this course of action, and pulled for Blackfriars accordingly.

They landed at a critical time, and fortunately for themselves at the right moment. For, coming into Fleet Street, they found it in an unusual stir; and inquiring the cause, were told that a body of Horse Guards had just galloped past, and that they were escorting some rioters whom they had made prisoners, to Newgate for safety. Not at all ill-pleased to have so narrowly escaped the cavalcade, they lost no more time in asking questions, but hurried to the Boot with as much speed as Hugh considered it prudent to make, without appearing singular or attracting an inconvenient share of public notice.

CHAPTER THE FIFTIETH.

They were among the first to reach the tavern, but they had not been there many minutes, when several groups of men who had formed part of the crowd, came straggling in. Among them were Simon Tapperit and Mr. Dennis; both of whom, but especially the latter, greeted Barnaby with the utmost warmth, and paid him many compliments on the prowess he had shown.

"Which," said Dennis, with an oath, as he rested his bludgeon in a corner with his hat upon it, and took his seat at the same table with them, "it does me good to think of. There was an opportunity! But it led to nothing. For my part, I don't know what would. There's no spirit among the people in these times. Bring something to eat and drink here. I'm disgusted with humanity."
"On what account?" asked Mr. Tappertit, who had been quenching his fiery face in a half-gallon can. "Don't you consider this a good beginning, mister?"

"Give me security that it isn't an ending," rejoined the hangman. "When that soldier went down, we might have made London ours; but no;—we stand, and gape, and look on—the justice (I wish he had had a bullet in each eye, as he would have had, if we'd gone to work my way) says 'My lads, if you'll give me your word to disperse, I'll order off the military,'—our people set up a hurrrah, throw up the game with the winning cards in their hands, and skulk away like a pack of tame curs as they are. Ah!" said the hangman, in a tone of deep disgust, "it makes me blush for my fellow creatures. I wish I had been born a ox, I do!"

"You'd have been quite as agreeable a character if you had been, I think," returned Simon Tappertit, going out in a lofty manner.

"Don't be too sure of that," rejoined the hangman, calling after him; "if I was a horned animal at the present moment, with the smallest grain of sense, I'd toss every man in this company, excepting them two," meaning Hugh and Barnaby, "for his manner of conducting himself this day."

With which mournful review of their proceedings, Mr. Dennis sought consolation in cold boiled beef and beer; but without at all relaxing the grim and dissatisfied expression of his face, the gloom of which was rather deepened than dissipated by their grateful influence.

The company who were thus libelled might have retaliated by strong words, if not by blows, but they were dispirited and worn out. The greater part of them had fasted since morning; all had suffered extremely from the excessive heat; and, between the day's shouting, exertion, and excitement, many had quite lost their voices, and so much of their strength that they could hardly stand. Then they were uncertain what to do next, fearful of the consequences of what they had done already, and sensible that after all they had carried no point, but had indeed left matters worse than they had found them. Of those who had come to the Boot, many dropped off within an hour; such of them as were really honest and sincere, never, after the morning's experience, to return, or to hold any communication with their late companions. Others remained but to refresh themselves, and then went home desponding; others who had theretofore been regular in their attendance, avoided the place altogether. The half-dozen prisoners whom the Guards had taken, were magnified by report into half a hundred at least; and their friends, being faint and sober, so slackened in their energy, and so drooped beneath these dispiriting influences, that by eight o'clock in the evening, Dennis, Hugh, and Barnaby, were left alone. Even they were fast asleep upon the benches, when Gashford's entrance roused them.

"Oh! You are here then!" said the secretary. "Dear me!"

"Why, where should we be, Muster Gashford!" Dennis rejoined as he rose into a sitting posture.

"Oh nowhere, nowhere," he returned with excessive mildness. "The streets are filled with blue cockades. I rather thought you might have been among them. I am glad you are not."
"You have orders for us, master, then?" said Hugh.

"Oh dear, no. Not I. No orders, my good fellow. What orders should I have? You are not in my service."

"Muster Gashford," remonstrated Dennis, "we belong to the cause, don't we?"

"The cause!" repeated the secretary, looking at him in a sort of abstraction. "There is no cause. The cause is lost."

"Lost!"

"Oh yes. You have heard, I suppose? The petition is rejected by a hundred and ninety-two, to six. It's quite final. We might have spared ourselves some trouble: that, and my Lord's vexation, are the only circumstances I regret. I am quite satisfied in all other respects."

As he said this, he took a penknife from his pocket, and putting his hat upon his knee, began to busy himself in ripping off the blue cockade which he had worn all day; at the same time humming a psalm tune which had been very popular in the morning, and dwelling on it with a gentle regret.

His two adherents looked at each other, and at him, as if they were at a loss how to pursue the subject. At length Hugh, after some elbowing and winking between himself and Mr. Dennis, ventured to stay his hand, and to ask him why he meddled with that riband in his hat.

"Because," said the secretary, looking up with something between a snarl and a smile, "because to sit still and wear it, or fall asleep and wear it, or run away and wear it, is a mockery. That's all, friend."

"What would you have us do, master?" cried Hugh.

"Nothing," returned Gashford, shrugging his shoulders; "nothing. When my Lord was reproached and threatened for standing by you, I, as a prudent man, would have had you do nothing. When the soldiers were trampling you under their horses' feet, I would have had you do nothing. When one of them was struck down by a daring hand, and I saw confusion and dismay in all their faces, I would have had you do nothing—just what you did, in short. This is the young man who had so little prudence and so much boldness. Ah! I am sorry for him."

"Sorry, master!" cried Hugh.

"Sorry, Muster Gashford!" echoed Dennis.

"In case there should be a proclamation out to-morrow, offering five hundred pounds, or some such trifle, for his apprehension; and in case it should include another man who dropped into the lobby from the stairs above," said Gashford, coldly; "still, do nothing."

"Fire and fury, master!" cried Hugh, starting up. "What have we done, that you should talk to us like this?"

"Nothing," returned Gashford with a sneer. "If you are cast into prison; if the young man—" here he looked hard at Barnaby's attentive face—"is dragged from us and from his friends; perhaps from people whom he loves, and whom his death would kill; is thrown into jail, brought out and hanged before their eyes; still, do nothing. You'll find it your best policy, I have no doubt."

"Come on!" cried Hugh, striding towards the door. "Dennis—Barnaby—come on!"
"Where! To do what?" said Gashford, slipping past him, and standing with his back against it.

"Anywhere! Anything!" cried Hugh. "Stand aside, master, or the window will serve our turn as well. Let us out!"

"Ha ha ha! You are of such—of such an impetuous nature," said Gashford, changing his manner for one of the utmost good fellowship and the pleasantest raillery: "you are such an excitable creature—but you'll drink with me before you go!"

"Oh, yes—certainly," growled Dennis, drawing his sleeve across his thirsty lips. "No malice, brother. Drink with Master Gashford!"

Hugh wiped his heated brow, and relaxed into a smile. The artful secretary laughed outright.

"Some liquor here! Be quick, or he'll not stop, even for that. How is a man of such desperate ardour!" said the smooth secretary, whom Mr. Dennis corroborated with sundry nods and muttered oaths—"Once roused, he is a fellow of such fierce determination!"

Hugh poised his sturdy arm aloft, and clapping Barnaby on the back, bade him fear nothing. They shook hands together—poor Barnaby evidently possessed with the idea that he was among the most virtuous and disinterested heroes in the world—and Gashford laughed again.

"I hear," he said smoothly, as he stood among them with a great measure of liquor in his hand, and filled their glasses as quickly and as often as they chose, "I hear—but I cannot say whether it be true or false—that the men who are loitering in the streets to-night, are half disposed to pull down a Roman chapel or two, and that they only want leaders. I even heard mention of those in Duke Street Lincoln's-Inn Fields, and in Warwick Street Golden Square; but common report, you know—You are not going!"

"To do nothing, master, eh?" cried Hugh. "No jails and halter for Barnaby and me. They must be frightened out of that. Leaders are wanted, are they? Now boys!"

"A most impetuous fellow!" cried the secretary. "Ha ha! A courageous, boisterous, most vehement fellow! A man who—"

There was no need to finish the sentence, for they had rushed out of the house, and were far beyond hearing. He stopped in the middle of a laugh, listened, drew on his gloves, and, clasping his hands behind him, paced the deserted room for a long time, then bent his steps towards the busy town, and walked into the streets.

They were filled with people, for the rumour of that day’s proceedings had made a great noise. Those persons who did not care to leave home, were at their doors or windows, and one topic of discourse prevailed on every side. Some reported that the riots were effectually put down; others that they had broken out again: some said that Lord George Gordon had been sent under a strong guard to the Tower; others that an attempt had been made upon the King’s life, that the soldiers had been again called out, and that the noise of musketry in a distant part of the town had been plainly heard within an hour. As it grew darker, these stories became more direful and mysterious; and often, when some frightened passenger ran past with tidings that the rioters were not far off, and were coming up, the doors were shut and barred, lower windows made secure, and as much consternation engendered, as if the city were invaded by a foreign army.

Gashford walked stealthily about, listening to all he heard, and diffusing or confirming, whenever he had an opportunity, such false intelligence as suited his own purpose; and, busily occupied in this way, turned into Holborn for the twentieth time, when a great many women and children came flying along the street—often panting and looking back—and the confused murmur of numerous voices struck upon his ear. Assured by these tokens, and by the red light which began to flash upon the houses on either side, that some of his friends were indeed approaching, he begged a moment's shelter at a door which opened as he passed, and running with some other persons to an upper window, looked out upon the crowd.

They had torches among them, and the chief faces were distinctly visible. That they had been engaged in the destruction of some building was sufficiently apparent, and that it was a Catholic place of worship was evident from the spoils they bore as trophies, which were easily recognisable for the vestments of priests, and rich fragments of altar furniture. Covered with soot, and dirt, and dust, and lime; their garments torn to rags; their hair hanging wildly about them; their hands and faces jagged and bleeding with the wounds of rusty nails; Barnaby, Hugh, and Dennis hurried on before them all, like hideous madmen. After them, the dense throng came fighting on: some singing; some shouting in triumph; some quarrelling among themselves; some menacing the spectators as they passed; some with great wooden fragments, on which they spent their rage as if they had been alive, rending them limb from limb, and hurling the scattered morsels high into the air; some in a drunken state, unconscious of the hurts they had received from falling bricks, and stones, and beams; one borne upon a shutter, in the very midst, covered with a dingy cloth, a senseless, ghastly heap. Thus—a vision of coarse faces, with here and there a blot of flaring, smoky light; a dream of demon heads and savage eyes, and sticks and iron bars uplifted in the air, and whirled about; a bewildering horror, in which so much was seen, and yet so little, which seemed so long and yet so short, in which there were so many phantoms, not to be forgotten all through life, and yet so many things that could not be observed in that distracting glimpse—it flitted onward, and was gone.

As it passed away upon its work of wrath and ruin, a piercing scream was heard. A knot of persons ran towards the spot; Gashford, who just then emerged into the street, among them. He was on the outskirts of the little concourse, and could not see or hear what passed within; but one who had a better place, informed him that a widow woman had descried her son among the rioters.

"Is that all?" said the secretary, turning his face homewards. "Well! I think this looks a little more like business!"
ADVERTISEMENTS.

THOS. HARRIS & SON'S

ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES.

Warrented superior to any other telescopes at the price. On receiving a remittance a telescope will be sent, CARRIAGE FREE, TO ANY PART OF THE KINGDOM, and exchanged if not approved. No tourist or sensible visitor should be without one.

A pocket telescope to show objects 6 miles off... Price 1L 10s. 6d.

A pocket telescope to show objects 20 miles off... Price 2L 6s. 6d.

THOS. HARRIS & SON, Opticians to the Royal Family, No. 52, opposite the British Museum, London, established by years. Resident, not related to, nor connected with, a house of the same name.

Price 2L 6s. (post-free 6d. extra), correct to July 1941, in 200 pages!

THE VISITOR'S GUIDE TO THE SIGHTS OF LONDON.

GREATS, AND OTHERWISE.

PARKER and Co., Hat Manufacturers, 86, Queen-street, Cheapside.—The only place in London where a handsomely bound BEAVER HAT can be obtained at its wholesale, 86, Queen-street, six doors from Cheapside. Paris Velvet-snapped and Grosmani Hats on the same terms, from 4L 16s. upwards.

Price 1L 10s. 6d., correct to July 1941, in 200 pages!

THE VISITOR'S GUIDE TO THE WATERING-PLACES.

Describing every object of Interest and Attraction at the various places of Summer resort.

FLUTES.—Eight-keyed COCOA FLUTES, with patent head, double plates, stops to the C keys, the keys, plus, &c. of the best silk, SILVER and GILT, Price 2l. 15s. ed. These instruments are made of the choicest wood, finished with great care, and warranted perfect in tune. Manufactured by H. FENWICK, Teacher of the flute, 17, Northumberland-street, Strand.

LONDON & BRIGHTON SHOE DEPOTS,

46, Graunchew-street, London; and 6, Royal Colonnade, Brighton.

W. M. TOZER, Boor & Snor Manufacturer, invites the attention of the public to his extensive stock of Boots and Shoes, which will be found replete with every article available for the Promenade, Green Fields, of the best quality and workmanship, and at the most moderate prices.

REMEMBER!!!—Tozer's Boots on the shelf, 46, Graunchew-street, London; and 6, Royal Colonnade, Brighton.

EMOLLIENT VEGETABLE SOAP. — In every article of this description the most approved emollient qualities, as likewise extracts from Flowers of the most fragrant. The skin, by its constant application, will become perniciously soft and clear, and the unpleasant sensation derived from sudden changes of climate and season, as well as the hardness which it generally acquires from sea-bathing, will instantly be removed. Made and sold at 6d. each by ROYCE, BROOKBROWN, and ROYCE, 35, New Bond Street.

BEART'S PATENT PNEUMATIC COFFEE FILTER.

The principle of this beautiful invention is allowed, by all Engineers and Men of Science, to surpass that of any other Coffee Filter ever offered to the public. The simplicity of its construction enables the most ignorant servant to send to table without trouble, a Pot of Coffee surpassing, in brilliancy of colour and flavour, the most sanguine wishes of the greatest engines in this delicious beverage. We have heard a great deal of the beauty of the Coffee introduced after dinner by the French, but nothing succeeds the black Coffee may be made by this invention, and the Coffee being made by Infusion, the Aroma only is extracted, and the rancid and injurious parts remain in the grounds.

It is a well known fact, that from the first introduction of the Coffee, the only preventive to its general use has been the difficulty of making it. Various means have been adopted—Patents have been taken out for Filters—Percolators have been introduced—all have failed: some, from their requiring a scientific person to use them; others, from the length of time occupied in making the Coffee, and the inconvenience of its being nearly cold when brought to table.

The Patentee, without hesitation, submitted his invention to the Mechanical Section of the British Association, at their late meeting in Birmingham. He was honoured by the thanks of that scientific body, and had the satisfaction of hearing it stated by them, that he had carried to a great length every thing that had before been, being in every respect adapted for general use.

The article has now been before the public for more than Six Months, and

HAS GIVEN UNIVERSAL SATISFACTION TO ALL WHO HAVE PURCHASED IT.

A fair trial only is required to convince every admirer of this exhilarating beverage, that this is the only guide by which there can be

TWO QUARTS OF COFFEE MADE IN FIVE MINUTES.

BRILLIANTLY CLEAR AND BOILING HOT.

TO BE HAD OF ALL RESPECTABLE IRONMONGERS IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

B. WALTON AND CO., SOL MANUFACTURERS, WOLVERHAMPTON.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW WORK EDITED BY BOZ.

Now ready, and to be had of all Booksellers, in 3 vols. post 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, by George Cruikshank, Fuss, &c.

THE PICNIC PAPERS.

BY VARIOUS HANDS.

EDITED BY CHARLES DICKENS, ESQ. (BOZ.)

HENRY COLBURN, PUBLISHER, 14, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET.

POCKET TRAVELLING MAPS,

WITH ALL THE RAILWAYS CORRECTLY LAID DOWN, AS FAR AS THEY AT PRESENT EXTEND.

Mounted in Cases adapted to the Waistcoat Pocket, 1s. 6d. each,

MAPS OF THE ENGLISH COUNTRIES.

ENGRAVED BY SIDNEY HALL.

WITH THE MAIL AND COACH ROADS CORRECTLY COLOURED.

HEREFORDSHIRE

Berkshire

Buckinghamshre

Cambridgeshire

Cheshire

Cornwall

Cumberland

Derbyshire

Devonshire

Durham

Essex

Gloucestershire

Hampshire

Herefordshire

Hertfordshire

Huntingdonshire

Isle of Wight

Ipswich

Kent

Lancashire

Leicestershire

Lincolnshire

Middlesex

Monmouthshire

Norfolk

Northamptonshire

Northumberland

Nottinghamshire

Oxfordshire

Rutlandshire

Suffolk

Sussex

Warwickshire

Westmoreland

Wiltshire

Worcestershire

Price Two Shillings, double the size of the above.

YORKSHIRE, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES.

COMPLETE SETS OF THE ABOVE, UNIFORMLY MOUNTED AND LETTERED,

IN A NEAT CASE, MAY BE HAD, PRICE FOUR GUINEAS.

A New Edition, with all the New Lines of Railroad correctly laid down, price 4s. mounted in a case,

A MAP OF THE INLAND COMMUNICATION,

Showing the Course of all the Canals, Railroads, and Navigable Rivers in England and Scotland.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 106, STRAND.

A PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR SILVER.

CATALOGUE WITH ENGRAVINGS (GRATIS), POSTAGE FREE.

The material is so like silver that it can only be told from it by reference to the stamp by persons well acquainted with it. MANY UNACCOUNTABLE MUTATIONS are being sold. The precious metal, which we warrant our dressing is silver, is only to be had at our Warehouse. It is the same colour throughout, and can be engraved the same as silver. As a criterion, spoons and forks, half-sized tables, teapot, &c., are down. The catalogue contains the prices, with the table of the very IRON-MONGERY article necessary to the furnishing of a house of any size, 2s. 6d. per cent. under any other old established house.

RIPPIN & BULTON, 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street.—Established 1826.

Sportmen should see Doudney & Son’s celebrated Shooting Jackets, 21s.; and of every description of Sportman’s Clothing.

LADIES’ ELEGANT RIDING HABITS.

Summer Cloths

Ladies’ Cloths

Saxony Cloths

GENTLEMEN’S

Superfine Dress Coat

Extra Riding, the best that is made

Superfine Frock Coat, Silk Filings

Buckskin Travellers

New Pattern, Summer Travellers, 11d. 6d. per pair, or three pairs

Summer Waistcoats, 7s. 6d.; or three

Nile Bengal Waddington, 1s. 6d.

Nearest ammonia Coat

CONTRACTS BY THE YEAR.

Originated by F. P. D. & Son., are universally adopted by Countrymen and Professional Gentlemen, as being more regular and convenient. The Prices are the lowest ever offered—

| Two Suits per Year, Superfine | 47 7 0 |
| Extra Buckskin, the best that is made | 5 7 0 |
| Three Suits per year | 69 1 9 |
| Four Suits per year | 12 1 0 |
| Extra Saxony, 6d. | 1 4 6 |
| Extra Saxony, 6d. | 1 4 6 |

[THE ODD SUITS TO BE RETURNED.]

E. P. DOUDNEY & SON, 49, LOMBARD STREET.

BOYS’ CLOTHING.

Skein and Huter Suits

Camlet Cloaks

Cloth Cloaks

GENTLEMEN’S

Morning Coats and Dressing Gowns

Camlet Cloaks, lined all through

Cloth Opera Cloak

Army Cloth Blue Spanish Cloak

Sack Cloths

Sack Cloths

Cloth or Frock Fishing Travellers

Sack Livery Cloaks, complete

COUNTRY GENTLEMEN

Prefer their Clothes Fashionably made, at a FIRST-RATE LONDON HOUSE, are respectfully informed, that by a post-paid letter, praying information as to the advantageous Suits, &c., to be obtained from the most prominent Articles of Menswear, &c., that a Study of the Systems of Business, Disposition of the Article, and Statement of Prices. Or if Three or Four Gentlemen choose to take the Quotations will be dispatched immediately to wait on them.

SPORTSMEN FULLY EQUIPPED.

49, LOMBARD STREET.