Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 79

Charles Dickens
MASTER
HUMPHREY'S CLOCK
BY "BOZ."

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1841.

WITH

ILLUSTRATIONS BY G. CATTERMOLE & H. K. BROWNE.

BARNABY RUDGE.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, STRAND;

Price 3d.
THE RESPIRATOR; OR, SAFEGUARD FOR THE LUNGS.

JOHN T. TYLER having been appointed by Mr. Jeffreys the general Agent for the sale of the Respirator, in the United Kingdom, the Continent, and America, is authorized to state that he has at length succeeded in the introduction of this instrument with such success as to merit the increased sale of the Respirator, and with a view to its more extensive use, we are happy to find that its inventor, Mr. Jeffreys, to whom pulmonary invalids are deeply indebted, has greatly reduced its price. There are now very few, if any, practitioners who can number one or more patients who, during the winter months, will not profit by the use of the Respirator.

For the relief of persons suffering from the state of the circulation and digestion, which, from exposure of the patient to cold, is the cause of constant irritation in the lungs on the one hand, and the improvement of the general health and spirits, by the enjoyment of exercise and fresh air, on the other, that their ailments have gradually diminished, and in some cases entirely disappeared, has taken place. In numerous instances, by persevering use of the Respirator, persons have by degrees become free from it, even in severe weather. Several cases have been reported to Mr. Jeffreys of persons in a deplorable state of health being enabled, by the aid of the Respirator, to reside in England, who had annually been driven to seek a milder climate abroad.

It is necessary for us to speak in favour of this ingenious and valuable instrument. The experience of the profession has established its efficacy as a preventive, as well as also a curative means. This is an instrument that the latter, which includes the nostrils also. The instrument itself is now rendered quite inviable, being covered from view by a fine shawl wrapper, and cannot be distinguished from a neat handkerchief. The oral arrests equally well with the nostril. When the wound has occasioned himself to breathe through the mouth only, and not through the nose, it is greatly to be preferred. It is then of no moment; and by covering the nostrils as well as the mouth, it supplies through both passages pure and warm air freely to the lungs.

TESTIMONIALS.

The Respirator is of two kinds, the oral and the nasal. The former covers the mouth only, and it is therefore more generally in its appearance than the latter, which includes the nostrils also. The instrument itself is now rendered quite inviable, being covered from view by a fine shawl wrapper, and cannot be distinguished from a neat handkerchief.

The adsorption of dust, soot, and other particles separated from it. The workmanship is most elaborate and delicate, and the lowest whisper can be heard through the instrument.

The Respirator is of two kinds, the oral and the nasal. The former covers the mouth only, and it is therefore more generally in its appearance than the latter, which includes the nostrils also. The instrument itself is now rendered quite inviable, being covered from view by a fine shawl wrapper, and cannot be distinguished from a neat handkerchief. The oral arrests equally well with the nostril. When the wound has occasioned himself to breathe through the mouth only, and not through the nose, it is greatly to be preferred. It is then of no moment; and by covering the nostrils as well as the mouth, it supplies through both passages pure and warm air freely to the lungs.

In conclusion, we would entreat our professional brethren—Lancet, January 21, 1837—Smith's Address. Meeting of the

Farroux and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.

LIST OF PRICES.

ORAL RESPIRATOR, of medium power, for the mouth only.

I. Quality of gold wire throughout, faced with silver frame gilded 50s.
II. Quality faced with gilded wire 42s.
III. Quality of common materials 34s.

N.B. With the view of placing the Oral Respirator within the reach of the poorer classes, serviceable instruments, at 2s. 6d. men's, and 6s. for women's, may be obtained by patients at the general depot, on orders from their respective practitioners. To Hospitals and other places where pulmonary invalids are resident, an allowance is made, which reduces them to the lowest possible price.

N.B. They are sold by numerous respectable Agents in Town and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.

ORINAL RESPIRATOR, for the mouth and nostrils, chiefly used during the night to alleviate cough.

I. Quality of gold wire throughout, faced with silver frame gilded 56s.
II. Quality faced with gilded wire 50s.
III. Quality of common materials 39s.

N.B. They are sold by numerous respectable Agents in Town and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.

By exposure of the patient to cold, is the cause of constant irritation in the lungs on the one hand, and the improvement of the general health and spirits, by the enjoyment of exercise and fresh air, on the other, that their ailments have gradually diminished, and in some cases entirely disappeared, has taken place. In numerous instances, by persevering use of the Respirator, persons have by degrees become free from it, even in severe weather. Several cases have been reported to Mr. Jeffreys of persons in a deplorable state of health being enabled, by the aid of the Respirator, to reside in England, who had annually been driven to seek a milder climate abroad.

It is necessary for us to speak in favour of this ingenious and valuable instrument. The experience of the profession has established its efficacy as a preventive, as well as also a curative means. This is an instrument that the latter, which includes the nostrils also. The instrument itself is now rendered quite inviable, being covered from view by a fine shawl wrapper, and cannot be distinguished from a neat handkerchief. The oral arrests equally well with the nostril. When the wound has occasioned himself to breathe through the mouth only, and not through the nose, it is greatly to be preferred. It is then of no moment; and by covering the nostrils as well as the mouth, it supplies through both passages pure and warm air freely to the lungs.

In conclusion, we would entreat our professional brethren—Lancet, January 21, 1837—Smith's Address. Meeting of the

Farroux and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.

LIST OF PRICES.

ORAL RESPIRATOR, of medium power, for the mouth only.

I. Quality of gold wire throughout, faced with silver frame gilded 50s.
II. Quality faced with gilded wire 42s.
III. Quality of common materials 34s.

N.B. With the view of placing the Oral Respirator within the reach of the poorer classes, serviceable instruments, at 2s. 6d. men's, and 6s. for women's, may be obtained by patients at the general depot, on orders from their respective practitioners. To Hospitals and other places where pulmonary invalids are resident, an allowance is made, which reduces them to the lowest possible price.

N.B. They are sold by numerous respectable Agents in Town and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.

ORINAL RESPIRATOR, for the mouth and nostrils, chiefly used during the night to alleviate cough.

I. Quality of gold wire throughout, faced with silver frame gilded 56s.
II. Quality faced with gilded wire 50s.
III. Quality of common materials 39s.

N.B. They are sold by numerous respectable Agents in Town and Country, on the Continent and in America; and also at the Office & Depot 146, Regent Street, which will be opened on the 15th of October.
URING the whole course of the terrible scene which was now at its height, one man in the jail suffered a degree of fear and mental torment which had no parallel in the endurance, even of those who lay under sentence of death.

When the rioters first assembled before the building, the murderer was roused from sleep—if such slumbers as his, may have that blessed name—by the roar of voices, and the struggling of a great crowd. He started up as these sounds met his ear, and, sitting on his bedstead, listened.

After a short interval of silence the noise burst out again. Still listening attentively, he made out, in course of time, that the jail was besieged by a furious multitude. His guilty conscience instantly arrayed these men against himself, and brought the fear upon him that he would be singled out, and torn to pieces.

Once impressed with the terror of this conceit, everything tended to confirm and strengthen it. His double crime, the circumstances under which it had been committed, the length of time that had elapsed, and its discovery in spite of all, made him as it were, the visible object of the Almighty's wrath. In all the crime and vice and moral gloom of the great pest-house of the capital, he stood alone, marked and singled out by his great guilt, a Lucifer among the devils. The other prisoners were a host, hiding and sheltering each other—a crowd like that without the walls. He was one man against the whole united concourse; a single, solitary, lonely man, from whom the very captives in the jail fell off and shrunk appalled.
It might be that the intelligence of his capture having been bruited abroad, they had come there purposely to drag him out and kill him in the street; or it might be that they were the rioters, and, in pursuit of an old design, had come to sack the prison. But in either case he had no belief or hope that they would spare him. Every shout they raised, and every sound they made, was a blow upon his heart. As the attack went on, he grew more wild and frantic in his terror; tried to pull away the bars that guarded the chimney and prevented him from climbing up: called loudly on the turnkeys to cluster round the cell and save him from the fury of the rabble; or put him in some dungeon underground, no matter of what depth, how dark it was, or loathsome, or beset with rats and creeping things, so that it hid him and was hard to find.

But no one came, or answered him. Fearful, even while he cried to them, of attracting attention, he was silent. By and bye, he saw, as he looked from his grated window, a strange glimmering on the stone walls and pavement of the yard. It was feeble at first, and came and went, as though some officers with torches were passing to and fro upon the roof of the prison. Soon it reddened, and lighted brands came whirling down, spattering the ground with fire, and burning sullenly in corners. One rolled beneath a wooden bench, and set it in a blaze; another caught a water-spout, and so went climbing up the wall, leaving a long straight track of fire behind it. After a time, a slow thick shower of burning fragments, from some upper portion of the prison which was blazing nigh, began to fall before his door. Remembering that it opened outwards, he knew that every spark which fell upon the heap, and in the act lost its bright life, and died an ugly speck of dust and rubbish, helped to entomb him in a living grave. Still, though the jail resounded with shrieks and cries for help,—though the fire bounded up as if each separate flame had had a tiger's life, and roared as though, in every one, there were a hungry voice—though the heat began to grow intense, and the air suffocating, and the clamour without increased, and the danger of his situation even from one merciless element was every moment more extreme,—still he was afraid to raise his voice again, lest the crowd should break in, and should, of their own ears or from the information given them by the other prisoners, get the clue to his place of confinement. Thus fearful alike, of those within the prison and of those without; of noise and silence; light and darkness; of being released, and being left there to die; he was so tortured and tormented, that nothing man has ever done to man in the horrible caprice of power and cruelty, exceeds his self-inflicted punishment.

Now, now, the door was down. Now they came rushing through the jail, calling to each other in the vaulted passages; clashing the iron gates dividing yard from yard; beating at the doors of cells and wards; wrenching off bolts and locks and bars; tearing down the doorposts to get men out; endeavouring to drag them by main force through gaps and windows where a child could scarcely pass; whooping and yelling without a moment's rest; and running through the heat and flames as if they were cased in metal. By their legs, their arms, the hair upon their heads, they dragged the prisoners out. Some threw themselves upon the captives as they got towards the door, and tried to file away their irons; some danced about them with a frenzied joy, and rent their clothes, and were ready, as it seemed, to tear them limb from limb. Now a party of a dozen men came darting through the yard into which the murderer cast fearful glances from his darkened window; dragging a prisoner along the ground whose dress they had nearly torn from his body in their mad eagerness to set him free, and who was bleeding and senseless in their hands. Now a score of prisoners ran to and fro, who had lost themselves in the intricacies of the prison, and were so bewildered with the noise and glare that they knew not where to turn or what to do, and still cried out for help, as loudly as before. Anon some famished wretch whose theft had been a loaf of bread, or scrap of butcher's meat, came skulking past, barefooted,—going slowly away because that jail, his house, was burning; not because he had any other, or had friends to meet, or old haunts to revisit, or any liberty to gain, but liberty to stare and die. And then a knot of highwaymen went trooping by, conducted by the friends they had among the crowd, who muffled their fetters as they went along, with handkerchiefs and bands of hay, and wrapped them up in coats and cloaks, and gave them drink from bottles, and held it to their lips, because of their handcuffs which there was no time to remove. All this, and Heaven knows how much more, was done amidst the noise, the hurry, and distraction, like nothing that we know of, even in our dreams; which seemed for ever on the rise, and never to decrease for the space of a single instant.

He was still looking down from his window upon these things, when a band of men with torches, ladders, axes, and many kinds of weapons, poured into the yard, and hammering at his door, enquired if there were any prisoner within. He left the window when he saw them coming, and drew back into the remotest corner of the cell; but although he returned them no answer, they had a fancy that some one was within, for they presently set ladders against it, and began to tear away the bars at the casement; not only that, indeed, but with pickaxes to hew down the very stones in the wall. As soon as they had made a breach at the window, large enough for the admission of a man's head, one of them thrust in a torch and looked all round the room. He followed this man's gaze until it rested on himself, and heard him demand why he had not answered, but made him no reply.

In the general surprise and wonder, they were used to this; for without saying anything more, they enlarged the breach until it was large enough to admit the body of a man, and then came dropping down upon the floor, one after another, until the cell was full. They caught him up among them, handed him to the window, and those who stood upon the ladders cast him down upon the pavement of the yard. Then the rest came out, one after another, and, bidding him fly, and lose no time, or the way would be choked up, hurried away to rescue others.

It seemed not a minute's work from first to last. He staggered to his feet, incredulous of what had happened, when the yard was filled again, and a crowd rushed on, hurrying Barnaby among them. In another minute—not so much: another minute! the same instant, with no lapse or interval between! he and his son were being passed from hand to hand, through the dense crowd in the street, and were glancing backward at a burning pile which some one said was Newgate.
From the moment of their first entrance into the prison, the crowd dispersed themselves about it, and swarmed into every chink and crevice, as if they had a perfect acquaintance with its innermost parts, and bore in their minds an exact plan of the whole. For this immediate knowledge of the place, they were, no doubt, in a great degree indebted to the hangman, who stood in the lobby, directing some to go this way, some that, and some the other; and who materially assisted in bringing about the wonderful rapidity with which the release of the prisoners was effected.

But this functionary of the law reserved one important piece of intelligence, and kept it snugly to himself. When he had issued his instructions relative to every other part of the building, and the mob were dispersed from end to end, and busy at their work, he took a bundle of keys from a kind of cupboard in the wall, and going by a private passage near the chapel (it joined the governor's house, and was then on fire), betook himself to the condemned cells, which were a series of small, strong, dismal rooms, opening on a low gallery, guarded, at the end at which he entered, by a strong iron wicket, and at its opposite extremity by two doors and a thick grate. Having double locked the wicket, and assured himself that the other entrances were well secured, he sat down on a bench in the gallery, and sought the head of his stick, with an air of the utmost complacency, tranquillity, and contentment.

It would have been strange enough, a man's enjoying himself in this quiet manner, while the prison was burning, and such a tumult was clearing the air, though he had been outside the walls. But here, in the very heart of the building, and moreover with the prayers and cries of the four men under sentence sounding in his ears, and their hands, stretched out through the gratings in their cell doors, clasped in frantic entreaty before his very eyes, it was particularly remarkable. Indeed, Mr. Dennis appeared to think it an uncommon circumstance, and to banter himself upon it; for he thrust his hat on one side as some men do when they are in a waggish humour, sucked the head of his stick with a higher relish, and smiled as though he would say, "Dennis, you're a rumbol; you're a queer fellow; you're capital company, Dennis, and quite a character!"

He sat in this way for some minutes, while the four men in the cells, certain that somebody had entered the gallery, but could not see who, gave vent to such piteous entreaties as wretches in their miserable condition may be supposed to have been inspired with: urging, whoever it was, to set them at liberty, for the love of Heaven; and protesting, with great fervour, and truly enough, perhaps, for the time, that if they escaped, they would amend their ways, and would never, never, never again do wrong before God or man, but would lead penitent and sober lives, and sorrowfully repent the crimes they had committed. The terrible energy with which they spoke, would have moved any person, no matter how good or just (if any good or just person could have strayed into that sad place that night), to have set them at liberty; and, while he would have left any other punishment to its free course, to have saved them from this last dreadful and repulsive penalty; which never turned a man inclined to evil, and has hardened thousands who were half inclined to good.

Mr. Dennis, who had been bred and nurtured in the good old school, and had administered the good old laws on the good old plan, always once and sometimes twice every six weeks, for a long time, bore these appeals with a deal of philosophy. Being at last, however, rather disturbed in his pleasant reflection by their repetition, he rapped at one of the doors with his stick, and cried:

"Hold your noise there, will you?"

At this they all cried together that they were to be hanged on the next day but one; and again implored his aid.

"Aid! For what!" said Mr. Dennis, playfully rapping the knuckles of the hand nearest him.

"Oh, certainly," said Mr. Dennis, winking at the wall in the absence of any friend with whom he could humour the joke.

"And you're to be worked off, are you brothers?"

"Unless we are released to-night," one of them cried, "we are dead men!"

"I tell you what it is," said the hangman, gravely; "I'm afraid my friend that you're not in that 'ere state of mind that's suitable to your condition, then; you're not a going to be released: don't think it—Will you leave off that 'ere indecent row? I wonder you ain't ashamed of yourselves, I do."

He followed up this reproof by rapping every set of knuckles one after the other, and having done so, resumed his seat again with a cheerful countenance.

"You've had law," he said, crossing his legs and elevating his eyebrows: "laws have been made a' purpose for you; a very handsome prison's been made a' purpose for you; a parson's kept a' purpose for you; a constitutional officer's appointed a' purpose for you; a cart is maintained a' purpose for you—and yet you're not contented!—Will you hold that noise, you sir in the furthest?"

A groan was the only answer.

"So well as I can make out," said Mr. Dennis, in a tone of mingled badinage and remonstrance, "there's not a man among you. I begin to think I'm on the opposite side, and among the ladies; though for the matter of that, I've seen a many ladies face it out, in a manner that did honour to the sex.—You in number two, don't grind them teeth of yours. Worse manners," said the hangman, rapping at the door with his stick, "I never see in this place afore.
I'm ashamed on you. You're a disgrace to the Bailey!"

After pausing for a moment to hear if anything could be pleaded in justification, Mr. Dennis resumed, in a sort of coaxing tone:

"Now look'ee here, you four. I come here to take care of you, and see that you ain't burnt instead of the other thing. It's no use your making any noise, for you won't be found out by them as has broken in, and you'll only be hoarse when you come to the speeches,—which is a pity. What I say in respect to the speeches always is, 'Give it mouth.' That's my maxim. Give it mouth.
I've heerd," said the hangman, pulling off his hat to take his handkerchief from the crown and wipe his face, and then putting it on again a little more on one side than before, "I've heerd a eloquence on them boards—you know what boards I mean—and have heerd a degree of mouth given to them speeches, that they was as clear as a bell, and as good as a play. There's a pattern!
And always, when a thing of this nature's to come off, what I stand up for, is a proper frame of mind. Let's have a proper frame of mind, and we can go through with it, creditable—pleasant—sociable. Whatever you do, and I address myself, in particular, to you in the furthest, never snivel. I'd sooner by half, though I lose by it, see a man tear his clothes a' purpose to spoil 'em before they come to me, than find him snivelling. It's ten to one a better frame of mind, every way!"

While the hangman addressed them to this effect, in the tone and with the air of a pastor in familiar conversation with his flock, the noise had been in some degree subdued; for the rioters were busy in conveying the prisoners to the Sessions House, which was beyond the main walls of the prison, though connected with it, and the crowd were busy, too, in passing them from thence along the street. But when he had got thus far in his discourse, the sound of voices in the yard showed plainly that the mob had returned and were coming that way; and directly afterwards a violent crashing at the grate below, gave note of their attack upon the cells (as they were called) at last.

It was in vain the hangman ran from door to door, and covered the grates, one after another, with his hat, in futile efforts to stifle the cries of the four men within; it was in vain he dogged their outstretched hands, and beat them with his stick, or menaced them with new and lingering pains in the execution of his office; the place resounded with their cries. These, together with the feeling that they were now the last men in the jail, so worked upon and stimulated the besiegers, that in an incredibly short space of time they forced the strong grate down below, which was formed of iron rods two inches square, drove in the two other doors, as if they had been but deal partitions, and stood at the end of the gallery with only a bar or two between them and the cells.

"Halloa!" cried Hugh, who was the first to look into the dusky passage:

"Dennis before us! Well done, old boy. Be quick, and open here, for we shall be suffocated in the smoke, going out."

"Go out at once, then," said Dennis. "What do you want here?"

"Want!" echoed Hugh. "The four men."

"Four devils!" cried the hangman. "Don't you know they're left for death on Thursday? Don't you respect the law—the constitution—nothing? Let the four men be."

"Is this a time for joking?" cried Hugh. "Do you hear 'em? Pull away these bars that have got fixed between the door and the ground; and let us in."

"Brother," said the hangman in a low voice, as he stooped under pretence of doing what Hugh desired, but only looked up in his face, "can't you leave these here four men to me, if I've the whim? You do what you like, and have what you like of everything for your share, give me my share. I want these four men left alone, I tell you!"

"Pull the bars down, or stand out of the way," was Hugh's reply.

"You can turn the crowd if you like, you know that well enough, brother," said the hangman, slowly. "What! You will come in, will you?"

"Yes."

"You won't let these men alone, and leave 'em to me? You've no respect for nothing—haven't you?" said the hangman, retreating to the door by which he had entered, and regarding his companion with an ugly scowl. "You will come in, will you, brother!"
"I tell you, yes. What the devil ails you? Where are you going?"

"No matter where I'm going," rejoined the hangman, looking in again at the iron wicket, which he had nearly shut upon himself, and held ajar. "Remember where you're coming. That's all!"

With that, he shook his likeness at Hugh, and giving him a grin, compared with which his usual smile was amiable, disappeared, and shut the door.

Hugh paused no longer, but grated alike by the cries of the convicts, and by the impatience of the crowd, warned the man immediately behind him—the way was only wide enough for one abreast—to stand back, and wielded a sledge hammer with such strength, that after a few blows the iron bent and broke, and gave them free admittance.

If the two sons of one of these men, of whom mention has been made, were furious in their zeal before, they had now the wrath and vigour of lions. Calling to the man within each cell, to keep as far back as he could, lest the axes crashing through the door should wound him, a party went to work upon each one, to beat it in by sheer strength, and force the bolts and staples from their hold. But although these two lads had the weakest party, and the worst armed, and did not begin until after the others, having stopped to whisper to him through the grate, that door was the first open, and that man the first out.

As they dragged him into the gallery to knock off his irons, he fell down among them, a mere heap of chains, and was carried out in that state on men's shoulders with no sign of life.

The release of these four wretched creatures, and conveying them, astounded and bewildered, into the street so full of life—a spectacle they had never thought to see again, until they emerged from solitude and silence upon that last journey, when the air should be heavy with the pent-up breath of thousands, and the streets and houses should be built and roofed with human faces, not with bricks and tiles and stones—was the crowning horror of the scene. Their pale and haggard looks, and hollow eyes; their staggering feet, and hands stretched out as if to save themselves from falling; their wandering and uncertain air; the way they heaved and gasped for breath, as though in water, when they were first plunged into the crowd; all marked them for the men. No need to say "this one was doomed to die;" there were the words broadly stamped and branded on his face. The crowd fell off, as if they had been laid out for burial, and had risen in their shrouds; and many were seen to shudder, as though they had been actually dead men, when they chanced to touch or brush against their garments.

At the bidding of the mob, the houses were all illuminated that night—lighted up from top to bottom as at a time of public gaiety and joy. Many years afterwards, old people who lived in their youth near this part of the city, remembered being in a great glare of light, within doors and without, and as they looked, timid and frightened children, from the windows, seeing a face go by. Though the whole great crowd and all its other terrors had faded from their recollection, this one object remained; alone, distinct, and well-remembered. Even in the unpractised minds of infants, one of these doomed men darting by, and but an instant seen, was an image of force enough to dim the whole concourse; to find itself an all-absorbing place, and hold it ever after.
When this last task had been achieved, the shouts and cries grew fainter; the clank of fetters, which had resounded on all sides as the prisoners escaped, was heard no more; all the noises of the crowd subsided into a hoarse and sullen murmur as it passed into the distance; and when the human tide had rolled away, a melancholy heap of smoking ruins marked the spot where it had lately chafed and roared.

CHAPTER THE SIXTY-SIXTH.

Almroon he had had no rest upon the previous night, and had watched with little intermission for some weeks past, sleeping only in the day by starts and snatches, Mr. Harndale, from the dawn of morning until sunset, sought his niece in every place where he deemed it possible she could have taken refuge. All day long, nothing, save a draught of water, passed his lips; though he prosecuted his inquiries far and wide, and never so much as sat down, once.

In every quarter he could think of; at Chigwell and in London; at the houses of the trades’-people with whom he dealt, and of the friends he knew; he pursued his search. A prey to the most harrowing anxieties and apprehensions, he went from magistrate to magistrate, and finally to the Secretary of State. The only comfort he received was from this minister, who assured him that the Government, being now driven to the exercise of the extreme prerogatives of the Crown, were determined to exert them; that a proclamation would probably be put upon the morrow, giving to the military, discretionary and unlimited power in the suppression of the riots; that the sympathies of the King, the Administration, and both Houses of Parliament, and indeed of all good men of every religious persuasion, were strongly with the Catholics; and that justice should be done them at any cost or hazard. He told him, further, that other persons whose houses had been burnt, had for a time lost sight of their children or their relatives, but had in every case, within his knowledge, succeeded in discovering them; that his complaint should be remembered, and fully stated in the instructions given to the officers in command, and to all the inferior myrmidons of justice; and that everything that could be done to help him, should be done, with a good-will and in good faith.

Grateful for this consolation, feeble as it was in its reference to the past, and little hope as it afforded him in connexion with the subject of distress which lay nearest to his heart; and really thankful for the interest the minister expressed, and seemed to feel, in his condition; Mr. Harndale withdrew. He found himself, with the night coming on, alone in the streets; and destitute of any place in which to lay his head.

He entered an hotel near Charing Cross, and ordered some refreshment and a bed. He saw that his faint and worn appearance attracted the attention of the landlord and his waiters; and thinking that they might suppose him to be penniless, took out his purse, and laid it on the table. It was not that, the landlord said, in a faltering voice. If he were one of those who had suffered by the rioters, he durest not give him entertainment. He had a family of children, and had been twice warned to be careful in receiving guests. He heartily prayed his forgiveness, but what could he do?
Nothing. No man felt that, more sincerely than Mr. Haredale. He told the man as much, and left the house.

Feeling that he might have anticipated this occurrence, after what he had seen at Chigwell in the morning, where no man dared to touch a spade, though he offered a large reward to all who would come and dig among the ruins of his house, he walked along the Strand; too proud to expose himself to another refusal, and of too generous a spirit to involve in distress or ruin any honest tradesman who might be weak enough to give him shelter. He wandered into one of the streets by the side of the river, and was pacing in a thoughtful manner up and down, thinking, strangely, of things that had happened long ago, when he heard a servant-man at an upper window call to another on the opposite side of the street, that the mob were setting fire to Newgate.

To Newgate! where that man was! His failing strength returned, his energies came back with tenfold vigour, on the instant. If it were possible—if they should set the murderer free—was he, after all he had undergone, to die with the suspicion of having slain his own brother, dimly gathering about him—
He had no consciousness of going to the jail; but there he stood, before it.
There was the crowd, wedged and pressed together in a dense, dark, moving mass; and there were the flames soaring up into the air. His head turned round and round, lights flashed before his eyes, and he struggled hard with two men.

"Nay, nay," said one. "Be more yourself, my good sir. We attract attention here. Come away. What can you do among so many men?"

"The gentleman's always for doing something," said the other, forcing him along as he spoke. "I like him for that. I do like him for that."

They had by this time got him into a court, hard by the prison. He looked from one to the other, and as he tried to release himself, felt that he tottered on his feet. He who had spoken first, was the old gentleman whom he had seen at the Lord Mayor's. The other was John Grueby, who had stood by him so manfully at Westminster.

"What does this mean?" he asked them, faintly. "How came we together?"

"On the skirts of the crowd," returned the distiller; "but come with us.
Pray come with us. You seem to know my friend here?"

"Surely," said Mr. Haredale, looking in a kind of stupor at John.

"He'll tell you then," returned the old gentleman, "that I am a man to be trusted. He's my servant. He was lately (as you know, I have no doubt) in Lord George Gordon's service; but he left it, and brought, in pure goodwill to me and others, who are marked by the rioters, such intelligence as he had picked up, of their designs."

"On one condition, please, sir," said John, touching his hat. "No evidence against my Lord—a misled man—a kind-hearted man, sir. My Lord never intended this."

"The condition will be observed, of course," rejoined the old distiller. "It's a point of honour. But come with us, sir; pray come with us."

John Grueby added no entreaties, but he adopted a different kind of persuasion, by putting his arm through one of Mr. Haredale's, while his master took the other, and leading him away with all speed.
Sensible, from a strange lightness in his head, and a difficulty in fixing his thoughts on anything, even to the extent of bearing his companions in his mind for a minute together without looking at them, that his intellect was affected by the agitation and suffering through which he had passed, and to which he was still a prey, Mr. Haredale let them lead him where they would. As they went along, he was conscious of having no command over what he said or thought, and that he had a fear of going mad.

The distiller lived, as he had told him when they first met, on Holborn Hill, where he had great storehouses and drove a large trade. They approached his house by a back entrance, lest they should attract the notice of the crowd, and went into an upper room which faced towards the street; the windows, however, in common with those of every other room in the house, were boarded up inside, that out of doors all might appear quite dark.

By the time they had laid him on a sofa in this chamber, Mr. Haredale was perfectly insensible; but John immediately fetching a surgeon, who took from him a large quantity of blood, he gradually came to himself. As he was for the time too weak to walk, they had no difficulty in persuading him to remain there all night, and got him to bed without loss of time. That done, they gave him a cordial and some toast, and presently a pretty strong composing-draught, under the influence of which he soon fell into a lethargy, and, for atime, forgot his troubles.

The vintner, who was a very hearty old fellow and a worthy man, had no thoughts of going to bed himself, for he had received several threatening warnings from the rioters, and had indeed gone out that evening to try and gather from the conversation of the mob whether his house was to be the next attacked. He sat all night in an easy-chair in the same room—dozing a little now and then—and received from time to time the reports of John Grusley and two or three other trust-worthy persons in his employ, who went out into the streets as scouts; and for whose entertainment an ample allowance of good cheer (which the old vintner, despite his anxiety, now and then attacked himself) was set forth in an adjoining chamber.

These accounts were of a sufficiently-alarming nature from the first; but as the night wore on, they grew so much worse, and involved such a fearful amount of riot and destruction, that in comparison with these new tidings all the previous disturbances sunk to nothing.

The first intelligence that came, was of the taking of Newgate, and the escape of all the prisoners, whose track, as they made up Holborn and into the adjacent streets, was proclaimed to those citizens who were shut up in their houses, by the rattling of their chains, which formed a dismal concert, and was heard in every direction: as though so many forges were at work. The flames too shone so brightly though the vintner's skylights, that the rooms and staircases below were nearly as light as in broad day; while the distant shouting of the mob seemed to shake the very walls and ceilings.

At length they were heard approaching the house, and some minutes of terrible anxiety ensued. They came close up, and stopped before it; but after giving three loud yells, went on. And although they returned several times that night, creating new alarms each time, they did nothing there; having their hands full. Shortly after they had gone away for the first time, one of the scouts came running in with the news that they had stopped before Lord Mansfield's house in Bloomsbury square.

Soon afterwards there came another, and another, and then the first returned again: and so, by little and little, their tale was this:—That the mob gathering round Lord Mansfield's house, had called on those within to open the door, and receiving no reply (for Lord and Lady Mansfield were at that moment escaping by the backway), forced an entrance according to their usual custom. That they then began to demolish it with great fury, and setting fire to it in several parts, involved in a common ruin the whole of the costly furniture, the plate and jewels, a beautiful gallery of pictures, the rarest collection of manuscripts ever possessed by any one private person in the world, and worse than all, because nothing could replace this loss, the great Law Library, on almost every page of which were notes in the Judge's own hand, of inestimable value,—being the results of the study and experience of his whole life. That while they were howling and exulting round the fire, a troop of soldiers, with a magistrate among them, came up, and being too late (for the mischief was by that time done), began to disperse the crowd. That the riot act being read, and the crowd still resisting, the soldiers received orders to fire, and levelling their muskets shot dead at the first discharge six men and a woman, and wounded many persons; and loading again directly, fired another volley, but over the people's heads it was supposed, as none were seen to fall. That thereupon, and daunted by the shrieks and tumult, the crowd began to disperse, and the soldiers went away: leaving the killed and wounded on the ground: which they had no sooner done than the rioters came back again, and taking up the dead bodies, and the wounded people, formed into a rude procession, having the bodies in the front. That in this order, they paraded off with a horrible merriment; fixing weapons in the dead men's hands to make them look as if alive; and preceded by a fellow ringing Lord Mansfield's dinner-bell with all his might.

The scouts reported further, that this party meeting with some others who had been at similar work elsewhere, they all united into one, and drafting off a few men with the killed and wounded, marched away to Lord Mansfield's country seat at Caen Wood, between Hampstead and Highgate; bent upon destroying that house likewise, and lighting up a great fire there, which from that height should be seen all over London. But in this, they were disappointed, for a party of horse having arrived before them, they retreated faster than they went, and came straight back to town.

There being now a great many parties in the streets, each went to work according to its humour, and a dozen houses were quickly blazing, including those of Sir John Fielding and two other justices, and four in Holborn—one of the greatest thoroughfares in London—which were all burning at the same time, and burned until they went out of themselves, for the people cut the engine hose, and would not suffer the firemen to play upon the flames. At one house near Moorfields, they found in one of the rooms some canary birds in cages, and these they cast into the fire alive. The poor little creatures screamed, it was said, like infants, when they were flung upon the blaze; and one man was so touched that he tried in vain to save them, which roused the indignation of the crowd, and nearly cost him his life.

At this same house, one of the fellows who went through the rooms, breaking the furniture and helping to destroy the building, found a child's doll—a poor toy—which he exhibited at the window to the mob below, as the image of some unholy saint which the late occupants had worshipped. While he was doing this, another man with an equally tender conscience (they had both been foremost in throwing down the canary birds for roasting alive), took his seat on the parapet of the house, and harangued the crowd from a pamphlet circulated by the association, relative to the true principles of Christianity. Meanwhile the Lord Mayor, with his hands in his pockets, looked on as an idle man might look at any other show, and seem mightily satisfied to have got a good place.

Such were the accounts brought to the old vintner by his servants as he sat at the side of Mr. Haredale's bed; having been unable even to doze, after the first part of the night; being too much disturbed by his own fears; by the cries of the mob, the light of the fires, and the firing of the soldiers. Such, with the addition of the release of all the prisoners in the New Jail at Clerkenwell, and as many robberies of passengers in the streets, as the crowd had leisure to indulge in, were the scenes of which Mr. Haredale was happily unconscious, and which were all enacted before midnight.
THOS. HARRIS & SON'S

ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES.

Warranted unequalled by any other house at the prices. On receiving a written telegram a telescope will be sent, CARRIAGE FREE, TO ANY PART OF THE KINGDOM, and exchanged if not approved. No tourist or seaside visitor should be without one.

A pocket telescope to show objects 8 miles off. 1 10 0
A pocket telescope to show objects 12 miles off. 2 9 0
A pocket telescope to show objects 20 miles off. 4 0 0

THOS. HARRIS & SON; Opticians to the Royal Family, No. 32, opposite the British Museum, London, established 61 years. Retail, not related to, nor connected with, a house of the same name.

CHINA.—J. T. BRAMELD respectfully calls attention to his extensive stock of CHINA, GLASS, IRONSTONE, and EARTHENWARE, at his Show Rooms, New Bond Street. Agent for ROBINS' ROYAL PATES, 23:?, and EARTHENWARE, at his Show Rooms, Piccadilly, opposite British Museum, London, established 61 years. Retail, not related to, nor connected with, any house of the same name.

BALSAM OF ROSES FOR PRESERVING AND PROMOTING THE GROWTH OF THE HAIR.—This Balsam is prepared principally from the derlives mild astringent properties, peculiarly adapted to the nourishing and strengthening the Hair. By its use, the Hair, which has been impaired in quality, colour, or appearance, will be restored to all its strength and beauty.

Manufactured and Sold by R. J. GROSE, and Room. 30, New Bond Street. Price 5s. 6d. and 7s per Pot.

GERMAN UMBRELLAS,
Twenty-one Shillings each.
At W. & J. SANGSTER'S,
Manufacturers to H. R. Prince Albert, 146, Regent Street, and 94, Fleet Street.—Established A.D. 1772.

V. R. JOSEPH GILLOTT'S very superior PATENT and other METALIC PENS may be had by all Stationers, Booksellers, and other dealers in Pens throughout the United Kingdom.—The best of the celebrated which these Pens have attained with the Public is the great and rapidly increasing demand for the Pens of THOMAS HARRIS & SON; at the manufacturing establishment, Victoria Works, Graham-street, Birmingham.

POCKET TRAVELLING MAPS,
WITH ALL THE RAILWAYS CORRECTLY Laid Down, as Far as THEY are at Present Extend, Mounted in Cases adapted to the Waistcoat Pocket, 1s. 6d. each,

MAPS OF THE ENGLISH COUNTIES,
ENGRAVED BY SIDNEY HALL.
WITH THE MAIL AND COACH ROADS CORRECTLY COLOURED.

Price Two Shillings, double the size of the above.

YORKSHIRE, IRELAND, SCOTLAND, AND WALES.

LONDON: CHAPMAN AND HALL, 105, STRAND.
GILBERT'S COUNTY ATLAS OF ENGLAND & WALES.

The Maps will be of a somewhat larger size, but in that style of execution which has been so much praised in "Gilbert's Modern Atlas," and the letter-press will be drawn up with the greatest care, including the NEW POPULATION RETURNS, and all the modern statistics. Each county will consist of one or more maps according to its proportionate size, and to each map there will be two very large pages of letter-press containing as much matter as twenty full octavo pages; the work will thus be cheap as well as elegant; and perfect accuracy of position and truth of distance will be insured by taking the most authentic surveys as the ground-work, and carefully modernizing that wherever necessary. The following are some of the peculiar advantages by which this Atlas will possess over every other County Atlas:—

1st. The maps will be more accurate and more elegant, and the letter-press descriptions more clear and satisfactory. Ind. And this is quite a novel feature and peculiar to these maps—the whole of the counties will be drawn on a single UNIFORM SCALE, being one-sixteenth of the superficies and one-fourth of the linear dimensions of the Ordnance Survey. In former maps of the counties no attention appears to have been paid to scale, the maps being made to fill the plates, so that Holland seems quite as large as York. This gives ordinary readers a very inaccurate idea of the size of the counties, and leads even those who are skilled in geography to erroneous conclusions. The uniform scale introduced into this work will prevent all such errors, and enable a just estimate of the size of the counties to be formed by simple inspection.

2nd. The maps or maps of each county with the corresponding letter-press may be made up so as to carry in the washable pocket, or of the simple maps may also be mounted, and the letter-press put round them as a horizon, in which form they will answer for the passenger, the counting-house, and all pieces of public resort; and a map of the locality may be said to be an indispensable article of furniture in such places.

3rd. All the maps of a circuit or diocese may be made up in the same manner, and will be highly useful for general purposes.

4th. Every parish figured on the maps will have a mark to distinguish it if it be a rectory, vicarage, curacy, or chapel of ease; and the marks will be arranged so as not to interfere with the general clearness of the engraving.

5th. All the particular maps may be brought together so as to form one general map, on a plan of publication hitherto unattempted. Besides the methods of making up to which we have alluded, the maps, with their letter-press, can be bound up in the same manner as "Gilbert's Atlas of the World," and in this form the whole will be as elegant and appropriate table-book. The maps may also be put together either as one or as several sections, and put into a case along with the letter-press, in which form they will be the best travelling maps ever offered to the public.

On December 1st will be published, in royal 8vo, coloured, price only 1s. 6d. in patent binding,

GILBERT'S COLLEGE ATLAS, FOR SCHOOLS AND FAMILIES.

With a very copious Consulting Index, the best and cheapest ever published.

Contents.—1 and 2, Eastern and Western Hemispheres. 3, Europe. 4, England and Wales. 5, Scotland. 6, Ireland. 7, France. 8, Belgium. 9, Holland. 10, Prussia. 11, Russia in Europe. 12, Denmark. 13, Sweden and Norway. 14, Northern Europe. 15, Eastern Europe. 16, Turkey in Europe. 17, Austria. 18, Spain and Portugal. 19, Switzerland. 20, South Italy. 21, North Italy. 22, France. 23, Germany. 24, Asia. 25, Syria and Palestine. 26, North India. 27, South India. 28, China. 29, Japan. 30, North America. 31, South America. 32, Australia and Van Diemen's Land. 33. The very copious consulting index.

LONDON : GRATTAIP and GILBERT, 49, PATERNOSTER ROW, REMOVED FROM NO. 51.

On December 1st will be published, in royal 8vo, coloured, price only 2s. 6d. in patent binding,

GILBERT'S JUNIOR ATLAS.

Constrans.—1 and 2, Eastern and Western Hemispheres. 3, Europe. 4, England and Wales. 5, Scotland. 6, Ireland. 7, France. 8, Belgium. 9, Holland. 10, Prussia. 11, Russia in Europe. 12, Denmark. 13, Sweden and Norway. 14, Northern Europe. 15, Eastern Europe. 16, Turkey in Europe. 17, Austria. 18, Spain and Portugal. 19, Switzerland. 20, South Italy. 21, North Italy. 22, France. 23, Germany. 24, Asia. 25, Syria and Palestine. 26, North India. 27, South India. 28, China. 29, Japan. 30, North America. 31, South America. 32, Australia and Van Diemen's Land. 33. The very copious consulting index.

LONDON : GRATTAIR and GILBERT, 49, PATERNOSTER ROW, REMOVED FROM NO. 51.

On December 1st will be published, in monthly parts, beautifully printed in royal 8vo, and cogently illustrated, price 2s. 6d. each, to be completed in nineteen months.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF GEOGRAPHY;

Or, PHYSICAL AND PICTORIAL COMPANION TO GILBERT'S MODERN ATLAS.

REFORM YOUR TAILOR'S BILLS!!!

The best Shooting Jackets 21s.

GENTLEMEN

Equitable Silk Coats 4 s. 6 d.

Extra Saxony, the best that is made .... 1 s. 5 d.

Eurephon Frock Coat.

Riding Habit.

Cocktail.

Black wool Trousers.

City Clothing Establishment, Established 1784.

LADIES ELEGANT

Riding Habit.

GENTLEMEN

Splendid Silk Coats, with Washable 1s. 6d., or 3s. 11 d.

Morning Coat & Breeching.

Gown.

Cloth Opera Cloak.

Army Cloth Line

Cock, 3s. 6d. round

Super Cloth Opera.

Cloth or Tweed Trousers.

FIRST-RATE

BOYS

CLOTHING.

Skullion Dredens &c.

Trade & Hands

Suits 2s. 4d. each.

Camel Cloth, 4s.

Cloth Cloaks 1s. 6d.

CONTRACTS BY THE YEAR.

Gentlemen our articles, made of Silk, are universally received by Clergymen and Professed Gentlemen, as being more regular and economical.

CAL. THE PRICES ARE THE LOWEST EVER OFFERED.

Two Tails Coats per Year, without extraordinary charge .... 7 s. 6 d.

The Map will be Drawn, the best that is made of it.

Three Suits per Year, 11 s. 6 d.

Four Suits per Year, 15 s. 6 d.

Extra Saxony, 8 s. 6 d.

Your suits per Year, 10 s. 6 d.

Extra Saxony, 6 s. 10 d.

Extra Cotton, 6 s. 6 d.

Extra Silk, 6 s. 4 d.

Any other suits to be negotiated.

COUNTRY GENTLEMEN, preferring their Cloaks Fashionably made, at a FIRST-RATE LONDON HOUSE, are respectfully informed, that by a post paid system, they are relieved of the expense of transportation by a Proprietary objector to a Patent process of measuring, a Statement of Prices. Or if desire Four Gentlemen suits, one of the Travellers will be commissioned immediately to wait on them.

DOWNEY & SON, 49, LOMBARD ST.—ESTABLISHED 1784.