1841

Master Humphrey's Clock: Barnaby Rudge: Part 84

Charles Dickens

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge

Recommended Citation
https://digitalcommons.wpi.edu/barnabyrudge/39

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Novels at Digital WPI. It has been accepted for inclusion in Barnaby Rudge by an authorized administrator of Digital WPI. For more information, please contact digitalwpi@wpi.edu.
MESSRS. CLO McNAGHI & PUCKLE, PRINTSELLERS TO HER MAJESTY, HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN Dowager, HER R. H. THE DUCHESS OF KENT, &c. &c. &c.
No. 23, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS.

THE ROYAL PORTRAITS.
THE PORTRAITS OF HER MAJESTY & H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT.
Engraved by Mr. FREDERICK BACON, from the original Miniatures by W. C. Ross, Esq., A.R.A., Miniature Painter to the Queen, are ready for delivery.
PRINTS 1s. 6d.; PROOFS 1s. 1d.; FIRST PROOFS 2s. 2d. each.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.
THE PORTRAIT OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.
Engraved by H. P. RYALL, Esq., Portrait and Historical Engraver to the Queen, from the original Picture by H. P. RÉAUX, Esq., R.A., the possession of the Right Hon. Lord Whitworth, President of the Council.
PRINTS 1s. 6d.; PROOFS 2s. 2d.; FIRST PROOFS 3s. 3d.

It is not possible to speak too highly of the excellence of this Portrait, as an engraving it is first-rate, and as a likeness superior to anything published since 1829.

COMMODORE SIR CHARLES NAPIER, K.C.B.,
M.P. FOR MARLBOROUGH.

Engraved by Mr. JOSE PHRENE, from the original Picture by JOHN SIMPSON, Esq., Portrait Painter to the Queen of Portugal.
PRINTS 1s. 6d.; PROOFS 1s. 1d.; FIRST PROOFS 1s. 11d. 6d.

This is considered by the family and friends of the Commodore as an admirable likeness.

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF LINCOLN.
THE PRINT OF THE RIGHT REV. JOHN KAYE, D.D., Lord Bishop of Lincoln, engraved by Mr. Ryall, from the original Picture by S. LANE, Esq., will be ready for delivery to Subscribers in the course of December.
PRINTS 1s. 6d.; PROOFS 2s. 2d.; FIRST PROOFS 3s.

This is a most excellent likeness. The engraving is of the usual size of the half-length portraits of the Dignitaries of the Church.

LONDON: 23, COCKSPUR STREET—CLO McNAGHI AND PUCKLE.

TO READING CLUBS AND FAMILIES, IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION
TO CHURTON'S BRITISH AND FOREIGN LIBRARY,
26, HOLLES STREET, THREE DOORS FROM OXFORD STREET.

The General Catalogue of Churton's Library consists of 25,000 Volumes in the
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, AND PORTUGUESE LANGUAGES,

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

26, HOLLES STREET, THREE DOORS FROM OXFORD STREET.

The General Catalogue of Churton's Library consists of 25,000 Volumes in the
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, AND PORTUGUESE LANGUAGES,

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

26, HOLLES STREET, THREE DOORS FROM OXFORD STREET.

The General Catalogue of Churton's Library consists of 25,000 Volumes in the
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, AND PORTUGUESE LANGUAGES,

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

26, HOLLES STREET, THREE DOORS FROM OXFORD STREET.

The General Catalogue of Churton's Library consists of 25,000 Volumes in the
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, AND PORTUGUESE LANGUAGES,

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

26, HOLLES STREET, THREE DOORS FROM OXFORD STREET.

The General Catalogue of Churton's Library consists of 25,000 Volumes in the
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, SPANISH, AND PORTUGUESE LANGUAGES,
MONTH has elapsed,—and we stand in the bed-chamber of Sir John Chester. Through the half-opened window, the Temple Garden looks green and pleasant, the placid river, gay with boat and barge, and dimpled with the splash of many an oar, sparkles in the distance; the sky is blue and clear; and the summer air steals gently in, filling the room with perfume. The very town, the smoky town, is radiant. High roofs and steeple tops, wont to look black and sullen, smile a cheerful grey; every old gilded vane, and ball, and cross, glitters anew in the bright morning sun; and high among them all Saint Paul's towers up, showing its lofty crest in burnished gold.

Sir John was breakfasting in bed. His chocolate and toast stood upon a little table at his elbow; books and newspapers lay ready to his hand, upon the coverlet; and, sometimes pausing to glance with an air of tranquillity round the well-ordered room, and sometimes to gaze indolently at the summer sky, he ate, and drank, and read the news, luxuriously.

The cheerful influence of the morning seemed to have some effect, even upon his equable temper. His manner was unusually gay; his smile more placid and agreeable than usual; his voice more clear and pleasant. He laid down the newspaper he had been reading; leaned back upon his pillow with the air of one who resigned himself to a train of charming recollections; and after a pause, soliloquized as follows:

"And my friend the centaur, goes the way of his mama! I am not surprised. And his mysterious friend Mr. Dennis, likewise! I am not surprised. And my old postman, the exceedingly free-and-easy young madman..."
of Chipwell! I am quite rejoiced. It's the very best thing that could possibly happen to him."

After delivering himself of these remarks, he fell again into his smiling train of reflection; from which he roused himself at length to finish his chocolate, which was getting cold, and ring the bell for more.

The new supply arriving, he took the cup from his servant's hand; and saying, with a charming affability, "I am obliged to you, Peak," dismissed him.

"It is a remarkable circumstance," he said, dallying lazily with the teaspoon, "that my friend the madman should have been within an ace of escaping, on his trial; and it was a good stroke of chance (or, as the world would say, a providential occurrence) that the brother of my Lord Mayor should have been in court, with other country justices, into whose very dense heads curiosity had penetrated. For though the brother of my Lord Mayor was decidedly wrong; and established his near relationship to that amusing person beyond all doubt, in stating that my friend was sane, and had, to his knowledge, wandered about the country with a vagabond parent, avowing revolutionary and rebellious sentiments; I am not the less obliged to him for volunteering that evidence. These insane creatures make such very odd and embarrassing remarks, that they really ought to be hanged, for the comfort of society."

The country justice had indeed turned the wavering scale against poor Barnaby, and solved the doubt that trembled in his favour. Grip little thought how much he had to answer for.

"They will be a singular party," said Sir John, leaning his head upon his hand, and sipping his chocolate; "a very curious party. The hangman himself; the centaur; and the madman. The centaur would make a very handsome preparation in Surgeons' Hall, and would benefit science extremely. I hope they have taken care to bespeak him.—Peak, I am not at home, of course, to anybody but the hair-dresser."

This reminder to his servant was called forth by a knock at the door, which the man hastened to open. After a prolonged murmur of question and answer, he returned; and as he cautiously closed the room-door behind him, a man was heard to cough in the passage.

"Now, it is of no use, Peak," said Sir John, raising his hand in depreciation of his delivering any message; "I am not at home. I cannot possibly hear you. I told you I was not at home, and my word is sacred. Will you never do as you are desired?"

Having nothing to oppose to this reproof, the man was about to withdraw, when the visitor who had given occasion to it, probably rendered impatient by delay, knocked with his knuckles at the chamber-door, and called out that he had urgent business with Sir John Chester, which admitted of no delay.

"Let him in," said Sir John. "My good fellow," he added, when the door was opened, "how came you to intrude yourself in this extraordinary manner upon the privacy of a gentleman? How can you be so wholly destitute of self-respect as to be guilty of such remarkable ill-breeding?"

"My business, Sir John, is not of a common kind, I do assure you," returned the person he addressed. "If I have taken any uncommon course to get admission to you, I hope I shall be pardoned on that account."
“Well! we shall see; we shall see;” returned Sir John, whose face cleared up when he saw who it was, and whose prepossessing smile was now restored. “I am sure we have met before,” he added in his winning tone, “but really I forget your name.”
“My name is Gabriel Varden, sir.”
“Varden, of course, Varden,” returned Sir John, tapping his forehead.
“Dear me, how very defective my memory becomes! Varden to be sure—
Mr. Varden the locksmith. You have a charming wife, Mr. Varden, and a most beautiful daughter. They are well?”
Gabriel thanked him, and said they were.
“I rejoice to hear it,” said Sir John. “Commend me to them when you return, and say that I wished I were fortunate enough to convey, myself, the salute which I enthrust you to deliver. And what,” he asked very sweetly, after a moment’s pause, “can I do for you? You may command me, freely.”
“I thank you Sir John,” said Gabriel, with some pride in his manner, “but I have come to ask no favour of you, though I come on business.—Private,” he added, with a glance at the man who stood looking on, “and very pressing business.”
“I cannot say you are the more welcome for being independent, and having nothing to ask of me,” returned Sir John, graciously, “for I should have been happy to render you a service; still, you are welcome on any terms. Oblige me with some more chocolate, Peak—and don’t wait.”
The man retired, and left them alone.
“Sir John,” said Gabriel, “I am a working-man, and have been, all my life. If I don’t prepare you enough for what I have to tell; if I come to the point too abruptly; and give you a shock, which a gentleman could have spared you, or at all events lessened very much, I hope you will give me credit for meaning well. I wish to be careful and considerate, and I trust that in a straight-forward person like me, you’ll take the will for the deed.”
“Mr. Varden,” returned the other, perfectly composed under this exordium;
“I beg you’ll take a chair. Chocolate, perhaps, you don’t relish? Well! it is an acquired taste, no doubt.”
“Sir John,” said Gabriel, who had acknowledged with a bow the invitation to be seated, but had not availed himself of it; “Sir John”—he dropped his voice and drew nearer to the bed—“I am just now come from Newgate—” “Good Gad!” cried Sir John, hastily sitting up in bed; “from Newgate, Mr. Varden! How could you be so very imprudent as to come from Newgate! Newgate, where there are jail-fevers, and ragged people, and barefooted men and women, and a thousand horrors! Peak, bring the camphor, quick! Heaven and earth, Mr. Varden, my dear, good soul, how could you come from Newgate?”
Gabriel returned no answer, but looked on in silence while Peak (who had entered opportunely with the hot chocolate) ran to a drawer, and returning with a bottle, sprinkled his master’s dressing-gown and the bedding; and besides moistening the locksmith himself, plentifully, described a circle round about him on the carpet. When he had done this, he again retired; and Sir John, reclining in an easy attitude upon his pillow, once more turned a smiling face towards his visitor.

"You will forgive me, Mr. Varden, I am sure, for being at first a little sensitive both on your account and my own. I confess I was startled, notwithstanding your delicate preparation. Might I ask you to do me the favour not to approach any nearer?—You have really come from Newgate!"

The locksmith inclined his head.

"In-deed! And now, Mr. Varden, all exaggeration and embellishment apart," said Sir John Chester, confidentially, as he sipped his chocolate, "what kind of place is Newgate?"

"A strange place, Sir John," returned the locksmith, "of a sad and doleful kind. A strange place, where many strange things are heard and seen; but few more strange than that I come to tell you of. The case is urgent. I am sent here."

"Not—no, no—not from the jail!"

"Yes, Sir John; from the jail."

"And my good, credulous, open-hearted friend," said Sir John, setting down his cup, and laughing,—"by whom?"

"By a man called Dennis—for many years the hangman, and to-morrow morning the hanged," returned the locksmith.

Sir John had expected—had been quite certain from the first—that he would say he had come from Hugh, and was prepared to meet him on that point. But this answer occasioned him a degree of astonishment, which for the moment he could not, with all his command of feature, prevent his face from expressing. He quickly subdued it, however, and said in the same light tone:

"And what does the gentleman require of me? My memory may be at fault again, but I don't recollect that I over had the pleasure of an introduction to him, or that I ever numbered him among my personal friends, I do assure you, Mr. Varden."

"Sir John," returned the locksmith, gravely, "I will tell you, as nearly as I can, in the words he used to me, what he desires that you should know, and what you ought to know without a moment's loss of time."

Sir John Chester settled himself in a position of greater repose, and looked at his visitor with an expression of face which seemed to say, "This is an amusing fellow! I'll hear him out."

"You may have seen in the newspapers, Sir," said Gabriel, pointing to the one which lay by his side, "that I was a witness against this man upon his trial some days since; and that it was not his fault I was alive, and able to speak to what I knew."

"May have seen!" cried Sir John. "My dear Mr. Varden, you are quite a public character, and live in all men's thoughts most deservedly. Nothing can exceed the interest with which I read your testimony, and remembered that I had the pleasure of a slight acquaintance with you.—I hope we shall have your portrait published!"
"This morning, Sir," said the locksmith, taking no notice of these compliments, "early this morning, a message was brought to me from Newgate, at this man's request, desiring that I would go and see him, for he had something particular to communicate. I needn't tell you that he is no friend of mine, and that I had never seen him, until the rioters beset my house."

Sir John fanned himself gently with the newspaper, and nodded.

"I knew, however, from the general report," resumed Gabriel, "that the order for his execution to-morrow, went down to the prison last night; and looking upon him as a dying man, I complied with his request."

"You are quite a Christian, Mr. Varden," said Sir John; "and in that amiable capacity, you increase my desire that you should take a chair."

"He said," continued Gabriel, looking steadily at the knight, "that he had sent to me, because he had no friend or companion in the whole world, (being the common hangman), and because he believed, from the way in which I had given my evidence, that I was an honest man, and would act truly by him. He said that, being shunned by every one who knew his calling, even by people of the lowest and most wretched grade; and finding, when he joined the rioters, that the men he acted with had no suspicion of it (which I believe is true enough, for a poor fool of an old prentice of mine was one of them); he had kept his own counsel, up to the time of his being taken and put in jail."

"Very discreet of Mr. Dennis," observed Sir John, with a slight yawn, "but—except for your admirable and lucid manner of tolling it, which is perfect—not very interesting to me."

"When," pursued the locksmith, quite unabashed and holly regardless of these interruptions, "when he was taken to the jail, he found that his fellow-prisoner, in the same room, was a young man, Hugh by name, a loader in the riots, who had been betrayed and given up by himself. From something which fell from this unhappy creature in the course of the angry words they had at meeting, he discovered that his mother had suffered the death to which they both are now condemned.—The time is very short, Sir John."

The knight laid down his paper fan, replaced his cup upon the table at his side, and, saving for the smile that lurked about his mouth, looked at the locksmith with as much steadiness as the locksmith looked at him.

"They have been in prison now, a month. One conversation led to many more; and the hangman soon found, from a comparison of time, and place, and dates, that he had executed the sentence of the law upon this woman, himself. She had been tempted by want—as so many people are—into the easy crime of passing forged notes. She was young and handsome; and the traders who employ men, women, and children in this traffic, looked upon her as one who was well adapted for their business, and who would probably go on without suspicion for a long time. But they were mistaken; for she was stopped in the commission of her very first offence, and died for it. She was of gipsy blood, Sir John—"

It might have been the effect of a passing cloud which obscured the sun, and cast a shadow on his face; but the knight turned deadly pale. Still he met the locksmith's eye, as before.
"She was of gipsy blood, Sir John," repeated Gabriel, "and had a high, free spirit. This, and her good looks, and her lofty manner, interested some gentlemen who were easily moved by dark eyes; and efforts were made to save her. They might have been successful, if she would have given them any clue to her history. But she never would, or did. There was reason to suspect that she would make an attempt upon her life. A watch was set upon her night and day; and from that time she never spoke again—"

Sir John stretched out his hand towards his cup. The locksmith going on, arrested it half way.

"Until she had but a minute to live. Then she broke silence, and said, in a low firm voice which no one heard but this executioner, for all other living creatures had retired and left her to her fate, 'If I had a dagger within these fingers and he was within my reach, I would strike him dead before me, even now!' The man asked 'Who?'—she said, The father of her boy.'

Sir John drew back his outstretched hand, and seeing that the locksmith paused, signed to his boy, "That was the first word she had ever spoken, from which it could be understood that she had any relative on earth. 'Was the child alive?' he asked. '

Yes.' He asked her where it was, its name, and whether she had any wish respecting it. She had but one, she said. It was that the boy might live and grow, in utter ignorance of his father, so that no arts might teach him to be gentle and forgiving. When he became a man, she trusted to the God of their tribe to bring the father and the son together, and revenge her through her child.

He asked her other questions, but she spoke no more. Indeed, he says she scarcely said this much to him, but stood with her face turned upwards to the sky, and never looked towards him once."

Sir John took a pinch of snuff; glanced approvingly at an elegant little sketch, entitled "Nature," on the wall; and raising his eyes to the locksmith's face again, said, with an air of courtesy and patronage, "You were observing, Mr. Varden—"

"That she never," returned the locksmith, who was not to be diverted by any artifice from his firm manner, and his steady gaze, "that she never looked towards him once, Sir John; and so she died, and he forgot her. But, some years afterwards, a man was sentenced to die the same death, who was a gipsy too; a sunburnt, swarthy fellow, almost a wild man; and while he lay in prison, under sentence, he, who had seen the hangman more than once while he was free, cut an image of him on his stick, by way of braving death, and showing those who attended on him, how little he cared or thought about it. He gave this stick into his hands at Tyburn, and told him then, that the woman I have spoken of had left her own people to join a fine gentleman, and that, being deserted by him, and cast off by her old friends, she had sworn within her own proud breast, that whatever her misery might be, she would ask no help of any human being. He told him that she had kept her word to the last; and that, meeting even him in the streets—he had been fond of her.
once, it seems—she had slipped from him by a trick, and he never saw her again, until, being in one of the frequent crowds at Tyburn, with some of his rough companions, he had been driven almost mad by seeing, in the criminal under another name, whose death he had come to witness, herself. Standing in the same place in which she had stood, he told the hangman this, and told him, too, her real name, which only her own people and the gentleman for whose sake she had left them, knew.—That name he will tell again, Sir John,
to none but you."

"To none but me!" exclaimed the knight, pausing in the act of raising his cup to his lips with a perfectly steady hand, and curling up his little finger for the better display of a brilliant ring with which it was ornamented :
"but me!—My dear Mr. Varden, how very preposterous, to select me for his confidence! With you at his elbow, too, who are so perfectly trustworthy."

"Sir John, Sir John," returned the locksmith, "at twelve to-morrow, these men die. Hear the few words I have to add, and do not hope to deceive me; for though I am a plain man of humble station, and you are a gentleman of rank and learning, the truth raises me to your level, and by its power I know that you anticipate the disclosure with which I am about to end, and that you believe this doomed man, Hugh, to be your son."

"Nay," said Sir John, bantering him with a gay air; "the wild gentleman, who died so suddenly, scarcely went as far as that, I think?"

"He did not," returned the locksmith, "for she had bound him by some pledge, known only to these people, and which the worst among them respect, ot to tell your name: but, in a fantastic pattern on the stick, he had carved some letters, and when the hangman asked it, he bade him, especially if he should ever meet with her son in after life, remember that place well."

"What place?"

"Chester."

The knight finished his cup of chocolate with an appearance of infinite relish, and carefully wiped his lips upon his handkerchief.

"Sir John," said the locksmith, "this is all that has been told to me; but since these two men have been left for death, they have conferred together, closely. See them, and hear what they can add. See this Dennis, and learn from him what he has not trusted to me. If you, who hold the clue to all, want corroboration (which you do not), the means are easy."

"And to what," said Sir John Chester, rising on his elbow, after smoothing the pillow for its reception; "my dear, good-natured, estimable Mr. Varden—with whom I cannot be angry if I would—to what does all this tend?"

"I take you for a man, Sir John, and I suppose to some pleading of natural affection in your breast," returned the locksmith indignantly. "I suppose to the straining of every nerve, and the exertion of all the influence you have, or can make, in behalf of your miserable son, and the man who has disclosed his existence to you. At the worst, I suppose to your seeing your son, and awakening him to a sense of his crime and danger. He has no such sense now. Think what his life must have been, when he said in my hearing, that if I moved you to anything, it would be to hastening his death, and ensuring his silence, if you had it in your power!"

"And have you, my good Mr. Varden," said Sir John in a tone of mild reproof, "have you really lived to your present age, and remained so very simple and credulous, as to approach a gentleman of established character with such credentials as these, from desperate men in their last extremity, catching at any straw? Oh dear! Oh fie, fie!"

The locksmith was going to interpose, but he stopped him:

"On any other subject, Mr. Varden, I shall be delighted—I shall be charmed—to converse with you, but I owe it to my own character not to pursue this topic for another moment."

"Think better of it, Sir, when I am gone," returned the locksmith; "think better of it, Sir. Although you have, thrice within as many weeks, turned your lawful son, Mr. Edward, from your door; you may have time, you may have years, to make your peace with him, Sir John: but that twelve o'clock will soon be here, and soon be past for ever."

"I thank you very much," returned the knight, kissing his delicate hand to the locksmith, "for your guileless advice; and I only wish, my good soul, although your simplicity is quite captivating, that you had a little more worldly wisdom. I never so much regretted the arrival of my hair-dresser as I do at this moment. God bless you! Good morning! You'll not forget my message to the ladies, Mr. Varden? Peak, show Mr. Varden to the door."

Gabriel said no more, but gave the knight a parting look, and left him.

As he quitted the room, Sir John's face changed; and the smile gave place to a haggard and anxious expression, like that of a weary actor jaded by the performance of a difficult part. He rose from his bed with a heavy sigh, and wrapped himself in his morning-gown.

"So, she kept her word," he said, "and was constant to her threat! I would I had never seen that dark face of hers,—I might have read these consequences in it, from the first. This affair would make a noise abroad, if it rested on better evidence; but as it is, and by not joining the scattered links of the chain, I can afford to slight it.—Extremely distressing to be the parent of such an uncouth creature! Still, I gave him very good advice: I told him he would certainly be hanged: I could have done no more if I had known of our relationship; and there are a great many fathers who have never done as much for their natural children.—The hair-dresser may come in, Peak!"

The hair-dresser came in; and saw in Sir John Chester (whose accommodating conscience was soon quieted by the numerous precedents that occurred to him in support of his last observation), the same imperturbable, fascinating, elegant gentleman he had seen yesterday, and many yesterdays before.
As the locksmith walked slowly away from Sir John Chester’s chambers, he lingered under the trees which shaded the path, almost hoping that he might be summoned to return. He had turned back thrice, and still loitered at the corner, when the clocks struck twelve.

It was a solemn sound, and not merely for its reference to to-morrow; for he knew that in that chime the murderer’s knell was rung. He had seen him pass along the crowded street, amidst the execrations of the throng; had marked his quivering lip, and trembling limbs; the ashy hue upon his face, his clammy brow, the wild distraction of his eye—the fear of death that swallowed up all other thoughts, and gnawed without cessation at his heart and brain. He had marked the wandering look, seeking for hope, and finding, turn where it would, despair. He had seen the remorseful, pitiful, desolate creature, riding, with his coffin by his side, to the gibbet. He knew that to the last he had been an unyielding, obdurate man; that in the savage terror of his condition he had hardened, rather than relented, to his wife and child; and that the last words which had passed his white lips were curses on them as his foes.

Mr. Haredale had determined to be there, and see it done. Nothing but the evidence of his own senses could satisfy that gloomy thirst for retribution which had been gathering upon him for so many years. The locksmith knew this, and when the chimes had ceased to vibrate, hurried away to meet him.

"For these two men," he said, as he went, "I can do no more. Heaven have mercy on them!—Alas! I say I can do no more for them, but whom can I help? Mary Rudge will have a home, and a firm friend when she most wants one; but Barnaby—poor Barnaby—willing Barnaby—what aid can I render him? There are many, many men of sense, God forgive me," cried the honest locksmith, stopping in a narrow court to pass his hand across his eyes, "I could better afford to lose than Barnaby. We have always been good friends, but I never knew, till now, how much I loved the lad."

There were not many in the great city who thought of Barnaby that day, otherwise than as an actor in a show which was to take place to-morrow. But if the whole population had had him in their minds, and had wished his life to be spared, not one among them could have done so with a purer zeal or greater singleness of heart than the good locksmith.

Barnaby was to die. There was no hope. It is not the least evil attendant upon the frequent exhibition of this last dread punishment, of Death, that it hardens the minds of those who deal it out, and makes them, though they be amiable men in other respects, indifferent to, or unconscious of, their great responsibility. The word had gone forth that Barnaby was to die. It went forth every month, for lighter crimes. It was a thing so common, that very few were startled by the awful sentence, or cared to question its propriety. Just then, too, when the law had been so flagrantly outraged, its dignity must be asserted. The symbol of its dignity,—stamped upon every page of the criminal statute-book,—was the gallows; and Barnaby was to die.
They had tried to save him. The locksmith had carried petitions and memorials to the fountain-head, with his own hands. But the well was not one of mercy, and Barnaby was to die.

From the first she had never left him, save at night, and with her beside him, he was as usual contented. On this last day, he was more elated and more proud than he had been yet; and when she dropped the book she had been reading to him aloud, and fell upon his neck, he stopped in his busy task of folding a piece of crape about his hat, and wondered at her anguish. Grip uttered a feeble croak, half in encouragement, it seemed, and half remonstrance, but he wanted heart to sustain it, and lapsed abruptly into silence.

"With them, who stood upon the brink of the great gulf which none can see beyond, Time, so soon to lose itself in vast Eternity, rolled on like a mighty river, swollen and rapid as it nears the sea. It was morning but now; they had sat and talked together in a dream; and here was evening. The dreadful hour of separation, which even yesterday had seemed so distant, was at hand.

They walked out into the court-yard, clinging to each other, but not speaking. Barnaby knew that the jail was a dull, sad, miserable place, and looked forward to to-morrow, as to a passage from it to something bright and beautiful. He had a vague impression too, that he was expected to be brave—that he was a man of great consequence, and that the prison people would be glad to make him weep: he trod the ground more firmly as he thought of this, and bade her take heart and cry no more, and feel how steady his hand was.

"They call me silly, mother. They shall see—to-morrow!"

Dennis and Hugh were in the court-yard. Hugh came forth from his cell as they did, stretching himself as though he had been sleeping. Dennis sat upon a bench in a corner, with his knees and chin huddled together, and rocked himself to and fro like a person in severe pain.

The mother and son remained on one side of the court, and these two men upon the other. Hugh strode up and down, glancing fiercely every now and then at the bright summer sky, and looking round, when he had done so, at the walls.

"No reprieve, no reprieve! Nobody comes near us. There's only the night left now!" moaned Dennis faintly, as he wrung his hands. "Do you think they'll reprieve me in the night, brother? I've known reprieves come in the night, afore now. I've known 'em come as late as five, six, and seven o'clock in the morning. Don't you think there's a good chance yet,—don't you? Say you do. Say you do, young man," whimpered the miserable creature, with an imploring gesture, "or I shall go mad!"

"Better be mad than sane, here," said Hugh. "Go mad."

"But tell me what you think. Somebody tell me what he thinks!" cried the wretched object,—so mean, and wretched, and despicable, that even Pity's self might have turned away at sight of such a being in the likeness of a man—"isn't there a chance for me,—isn't there a good chance for me? Isn't it likely they may be doing this to frighten me? Don't you think it is? Oh!" he almost shrieked, as he wrung his hands, "won't anybody give me comfort?"

"You ought to be the best, instead of the worst," said Hugh, stopping before him. "Ha, ha, ha! See the hangman, when it comes home to him!"

"You don't know what it is," cried Dennis, actually writhing as he spoke: "I do. That I should come to be worked off! I! I! That I should come!"

"And why not?" said Hugh, as he thrust back his matted hair to get a better view of his late associate. "How often, before I knew your trade, did I hear you talking of this as if it was a treat?"

"I ain't inconsistent," screamed the miserable creature; "I'd talk so again, if I was hangman. Some other man has got my old opinions at this minute. That makes it worse. Somebody's longing to work me off. I know by myself that somebody must be!"

"He'll soon have his longing," said Hugh, resuming his walk. "Think of that, and be quiet."

Although one of these men displayed, in his speech and bearing, the most reckless hardihood; and the other, in his every word and action, testified such an extreme of abject cowardice that it was humiliating to see him; it would be difficult to say which of them would most have repelled and shocked an observer. Hugh's was the dogged desperation of a savage at the stake; the hangman was reduced to a condition little better, if any, than that of a bound with the halter round his neck. Yet, as Mr. Dennis knew and could have told them, these were the two commonest states of mind in persons brought to their pass. Such was the wholesome growth of the seed sown by the law, that this kind of harvest was usually looked for, as a matter of course.

In one respect they all agreed. The wandering and uncontrollable train of thought, suggesting sudden recollections of things distant and long forgotten and remote from each other—the vague restless craving for something undefined, which nothing could satisfy—the swift flight of the minutes, fusing themselves into hours, as if by enchantment—the rapid coming of the solemn night—the shadow of death always upon them, and yet so dim and faint, that objects the meanest and most trivial started from the gloom beyond, and forced themselves upon the view—the impossibility of holding the mind, even if they had been so disposed, to penitence and preparation, or of keeping it to any point while that hideous fascination tempted it away—these things were common to them all, and varied only in their outward tokens.

"Fetch me the book I left within—upon your bed," she said to Barnaby, as the clock struck. "Kiss me first!"

He looked in her face, and saw there, that the time was come. After a long embrace, he tore himself away, and ran to bring it to her; bidding her not stir till he came back. He soon returned, for a shriek recalled him—but she was gone.

He ran to the yard gate, and looked through. They were carrying her away. She had said her heart would break. It was better so.

"Don't you think," whimpered Dennis, creeping up to him, as he stood with his feet rooted to the ground, gazing at the blank walls—"don't you think there's still a chance? It's a dreadful end; it's a terrible end for a man like me. Don't you think there's a chance? I don't mean for you, I mean for me. Don't let him hear us" (meaning Hugh); "he's so desperate."

"Now then," said the officer, who had been lounging in and out with his hands in his pockets, and yawning as if he were in the last extremity for some subject of interest: "it's time to turn in, boys."

"Not yet," cried Dennis, "not yet. Not for an hour yet."

"I say,—your watch goes different from what it used to," returned the man. "Once upon a time it was always too fast. It's got the other fault now."

"My friend," cried the wretched creature, falling on his knees, "my dear friend—you always were my dear friend—there's some mistake. Some letter has been mislaid, or some messenger has been stopped upon the way. He may have fallen dead. I saw a man once, fall down dead in the street, myself, and he had papers in his pocket. Send to enquire. Let somebody go to enquire. They never will hang me. They never can. —Yes, they will," he cried, starting to his feet with a terrible scream. "They'll hang me by a trick, and keep the pardon back. It's a plot against me. I shall lose my life!" And uttering another yell, he fell in a fit upon the ground.

"See the hangman when it comes home to him!" cried Hugh again, as they bore him away—"Ha ha ha! Courage, bold Barnaby, what care we? Your hand! They do well to put us out of the world, for if we got loose a second time, we wouldn't let them off so easy, eh? Another shake! A man can die but once. If you wake in the night, sing that out lustily, and fall asleep again. Ha ha ha!"

Barnaby glanced once more through the grate into the empty yard; and then watched Hugh as he strode to the steps leading to his sleeping-cell. He heard him shout, and burst into a roar of laughter, and saw him flourish his hat. Then he turned away himself, like one who walked in his sleep; and, without any sense of fear or sorrow, lay down on his pallet, listening for the clock to strike again.
THOS. HARRIS & SON'S

ACHROMATIC TELESCOPES.

Wanting to dispose of the greater part of a large stock of optical instruments, not related to, nor connected with the business of the late W. Lazenby & Son, the undersigned are disposed to sell, CARRIAGE FREE, TO ANY PART OF THE KINGDOM, and exchanged if not approved. No tourist or speculator should be without one. A pocket telescope to show objects 15 miles off. A pocket telescope to show objects 20 miles off. A pocket telescope to show objects 25 miles off.

THOS. HARRIS & SON. Opticians to the Royal Family, No. 22, Fleet-street, London, established 68 years. Recently removed to No. 55, New Bond Street. Not related to, nor connected with, a house of the same name.

A NEW IMPROVED PHANTASMAGORIA LATENTO, manufactured by Davis & Rowan, Inventors and Patrons of the Royal Teremeter and Prince Albert's Walking Stick. This Lamp is admirably adapted for Propelling Views, it shows figures brilliantly 8 feet diameter, at the distance of 12 feet, and can be moved about very portably, giving a diameter, very portable, and the price is less than any other house at the prices. On application, one will be sent, free of carriage.

HARVEY'S FISH SAUCE.

Lazenby and Son, sole Proprietors of this famous article, respectfully inform purchasers that each Bottle of the genuine article bears the name of William Lazenby on the back, in addition to the front label used so many years, and signed, ELIZABETH LAZENBY.

Warehouse, 4, Edward-street, Portman-square.

E. MOLLIENT VEGETABLE SOAP. — In the Victoria Clocktowers, these soaps are introduced in the market. One of the most approved excellent qualities, as likewise extracts from Flowers of the finest sort. This Soap, in its constant application, will become perceptibly soft and clear, and the unpleasant smell derived from sudden changes of climate and seasons, as well as the hardness which it generally acquires from use, will be speedily removed. Made and sold at 1s. a square by ROBSON, ROBINS, and ROES, 55, New Bond Street.

W. B. JOSEPH GILLOTT'S VERY SUPERIOR PATENT and other METALLIC PENS may be had of all Stationers, Booksellers, and other dealers in Pens throughout the United Kingdom. — The best test of the character of these Pens has the possession of the Patent is the greatest and regularly increasing demand for them. The number of Pens manufactured at the works of Joseph Gillott. From Oct. 1st, 1817, to Oct. 31st, 1818, was 5,168,192 of 2,396,972 2-3rd doz. or 3,783,285 8-12th doz. or 246,099 grn. 5-6 doz. pens. or 9,000 grn. 1-2 doz. pens. Price 12s. 6d. per gross.

DUNNN'S FINE ARCAD ARM Lamp Oil.

The excessively high price of Sperm Oil is fast causing the elegant Table, and other Lamps made on the Arcadian principle, to be abandoned. ARM Lamp Oil, in a degree, is frequently offered to the Public as a substitute for Sperm Oil; it burns with a clear light, it does not soot, and it is advertised as much cheaper than Sperm Oil; but when examined, it is found that the Lamps made with this Oil do not burn clear, and instead of seeming cheaper than the common Oil, are more expensive. This oil, however, may be sent to any part of the town, as a trial of the advantages and economy of using the ARM Lamp Oil. Sold by Dunn, Dunn, Oil and Italian Warehouse, Cannon-street, City. Cash price 2s. 6d. per gallon.

EXTRAORDINARY INVENTION.

MOSSE'S METAMETER, the most surprising instrument ever invented for sharpening razors, penknives, surgical instruments, &c., the house never requires any repair, the strength and durability of this instrument are such, that if the edge of a razor be drawn across an iron bar, one can watch the slide, and will not be obtained by any other method. The advertiser invites an inspection at his Manufactory, 294, Fleet-street. WANTS some respectable COUNTRY AGENTS. Reference to London. Manufacture of the celebrated Chinese Bristle Razor, warranted, from 2s. 6d. each: exchanged if not approved.

WRITING, BOOK-KEEPING, &c.

PERSONS of any age, however bad their writing, may, at a trial, at 1s. 6d. & 2s. 6d., in the most elegant and flowing style of Penmanship, adopt in either to professional persons or private correspondents, or in any other house at the prices. On application, one will be sent, free of carriage.

GERMAN UMBRELLAS.

Twenty-one Shillings each, at W. & J. SANGSTER'S Manufacturers to H. H. Prince Albert, 140, Regent Street, and 94, Fleet Street. — Established A.D. 1772.

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO.'S IMPROVED SHAVING CREAM, compounded by Patrick Al- nase.—This invaluable Cream possesses all the good qualities of the celebrated Naples Soap, without the disagreeable spirit insuperable from that article in a genuine state. It is of a white pearly appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not dry on the face, and enables in use the delightful fragrance of the almond, and prevented by his PATENT PENS.

JOHN GOSNELL & CO., successors to Price and Gosnell, at the original establishments, 16, Regent-street, London. to Mr. Newman, at the 1-16th doz. or upwards, will be sold at a trifling charge, and wholesale, of all Ironmongers; and every Inspector of the genuine article bears the name of the Manufacturers on the back, in addition to the front label used so many years, and signed, ELIZABETH LAZENBY.

PENATE ENAMELED CULINARY UTENSILS, &c.

The attention of Medical Men, House of Commons, &c., &c., to the manufacture of the Enamelled Hollooware, by T. and C. Clarkes, Hackford, Birmingham. The Messrs. Clarkes have succeeded, after a long series of expensive scientific experiments, in discovering and greatly improving the process by which the eminent Continental manufacturer has produced culinary utensils to greatly surpassing those of any other kind, as to the principal characteristics of the Hollooware Manufacturers of England to expend a vast amount of capital and labour in useless efforts to discover the art. The peculiarities of the Enamelled Holloware consists in substituting, for the usual process of fusing the inner surface of Shinquarce, Steppas, Kettles, Journees, &c., a smooth, hard, white enameled, closely resembling the finest porcelain. The advantages of this invention are those of the cleanliness and wholesomeness of Steppas, Journees, &c., with the hardness and cheapness of cast-iron. Cooking vessels have hitherto been made only of tinned iron and tin-plated copper; the former is not so firm, the latter is difficult to clean, and rusts as the tin wears off, whereas the latter is often used as a substitute for Sperm Oil; it burns with a clear light, it does not soot, and it is advertised as much cheaper than Sperm Oil; but when examined, it is found that the Lamps made with this Oil do not burn clear, and instead of seeming cheaper than the common Oil, are more expensive. This oil, however, may be sent to any part of the town, as a trial of the advantages and economy of using the ARM Lamp Oil. Sold by Dunn, Dunn, Oil and Italian Warehouse, Cannon-street, City. Cash price 2s. 6d. per gallon.

ADVERTISMENTS.

SPORTING COATS

HALF-A-CUINA.

If the most suitable and handsomest materials, scientifically dressed by their tailors and stock, Blue Turkey, pressed or plain, black Fleece, Camel, and Cloth, Frock Linen, Camlet, Lining, Calf Skin, and Beaver, &c. &c., are made up, each will be at least 1s. 6d. higher in price than the present style, and are warranted to be much better in every respect. The new Velvet, of the finest quality, will be found particularly suitable for wear in rainy weather, and there is a great demand for this material. The new Velvet, or Cloth, &c.

DOUDNEY'S, 97, FLEET STREET.
ADVERTISEMENTS.

WORKS PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM CURRY, jun. & Co., DUBLIN; W. S. ORR & CO., LONDON; AND SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

OUR MESS.

BY HARRY LORREQUER.

No. I.

CONTAINING THE COMMENCEMENT OF

JACK HINTON, THE GUARDSMAN, will be published on the 1st of January, 1841. To be continued Monthly, with Illustrations by H. K. Browne [Punch].

Price One Shilling. The First Number will contain a half Portrait of the Author, after Lea.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

CHARLES O'MALLEY, THE IRISH DRAGOON.

Vol. i. with 39 Illustrations by Puzez, price 12s. bound in cloth, is already published.

Vol. ii. price 12s., will be ready on the 25th November, and on the same day will be issued, Nos. XXI. and XXII., price 2s., completing the Work.

THE COMMISSIONER;

or, DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

No. I.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY. PRICE 2s. 6d.

The Number for January, 1842, will commence a new Volume.

Each Number contains a portrait of some distinguished Irishman—the following have already appeared:

Rev. C. S. Stanford...Rev. C. S. Stanford...
Edward Litten...Edward Litten...
Adam Bottomley...Adam Bottomley...
Edward Walford...Edward Walford...
Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...
William H. Maxwell...William H. Maxwell...
Hunter...Hunter...
Henry R. Addison...Henry R. Addison...
Lion-Coll. Chalmers...Lion-Coll. Chalmers...

"Of the monthlies our decided favourite—picking to none in elegance, variety, and vigor, in slightness, gravity, and humor, published with its contributions one of the very first classes in their respective lines."—Savannah Journal.

"The literary portion of the Magazine we turn with more than ordinary pleasure."—Northern Whig.

"One of the best monthlies of this admirable magazine we have ever seen, with a variety in its contents to please every taste."—Worcester Guardian.

"The Dublin University Magazine! is certainly the very best of the monthlies, we never arrive at the fag-end without a regret."—Boston Times.

"The Dublin University Magazine! comes as much recommended by its brevity and terseness, national characteristics, in freshness, and a glorious chapter of Charles O'Malley."—John Bull.

REV. C. H. ANDERSON...Rev. C. H. ANDERSON...
John G. Wilson...John G. Wilson...
John Stewart...John Stewart...
John C. & R....John C. & R....
Rev. William Williams...Rev. William Williams...
Mr. Wood...Mr. Wood...
Rev. Dr. Walsh...Rev. Dr. Walsh...
Lord Chancellor of Ireland...Lord Chancellor of Ireland...
Martin Doyle...Martin Doyle...
Dean Swift...Dean Swift...
The Surgeon-General...The Surgeon-General...
The President of Ireland...The President of Ireland...
Mr. S. C. Hall...Mr. S. C. Hall...
Lord Chancellor of Ireland...Lord Chancellor of Ireland...

"This glorious year is now taking the shine out of all its contemporaries. —The Gentleman's Magazine, Oct. 1424."

"Ireland has been called the secondisle of the world from its commercial and, were we at the moment requested to name anything which deserved to be called the first, we should reconsider. The world of Dublin University Magazine.—The London Review.

"The journal is interesting, and owing to the literary work, is almost unrivaled. It is one of the best products of Ireland."—Journal of Education.

"The Dublin University Magazine still holds its place among the periodicals to which the minds and arscs are turned, holding worthy, and proving hardly for it the supremacy of the day. —Oxford University Herald, April 21st.

"Despite of his political predilections, he is the most welcome morning friend we have."—Savannah Advertiser.

"The Dublin University Magazine! comes as much recommended by its brevity and terseness, national characteristics, in freshness, and a glorious chapter of Charles O'Malley."—John Bull.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY. PRICE 2s. 6d.

The Number for January, 1842, will commence a new Volume.

Each Number contains a portrait of some distinguished Irishman—the following have already appeared:

Rev. C. S. Stanford...Rev. C. S. Stanford...
Edward Litten...Edward Litten...
Adam Bottomley...Adam Bottomley...
Edward Walford...Edward Walford...
Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...
William H. Maxwell...William H. Maxwell...
Hunter...Hunter...
Henry R. Addison...Henry R. Addison...
Lion-Coll. Chalmers...Lion-Coll. Chalmers...

"Of the monthlies our decided favourite—picking to none in elegance, variety, and vigor, in slightness, gravity, and humor, published with its contributions one of the very first classes in their respective lines."—Savannah Journal.

"The literary portion of the Magazine we turn with more than ordinary pleasure."—Northern Whig.

"One of the best monthlies of this admirable magazine we have ever seen, with a variety in its contents to please every taste."—Worcester Guardian.

"The Dublin University Magazine! is certainly the very best of the monthlies, we never arrive at the fag-end without a regret."—Boston Times.

"The Dublin University Magazine! comes as much recommended by its brevity and terseness, national characteristics, in freshness, and a glorious chapter of Charles O'Malley."—John Bull.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY. PRICE 2s. 6d.

The Number for January, 1842, will commence a new Volume.

Each Number contains a portrait of some distinguished Irishman—the following have already appeared:

Rev. C. S. Stanford...Rev. C. S. Stanford...
Edward Litten...Edward Litten...
Adam Bottomley...Adam Bottomley...
Edward Walford...Edward Walford...
Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...
William H. Maxwell...William H. Maxwell...
Hunter...Hunter...
Henry R. Addison...Henry R. Addison...
Lion-Coll. Chalmers...Lion-Coll. Chalmers...

"Of the monthlies our decided favourite—picking to none in elegance, variety, and vigor, in slightness, gravity, and humor, published with its contributions one of the very first classes in their respective lines."—Savannah Journal.

"The literary portion of the Magazine we turn with more than ordinary pleasure."—Northern Whig.

"One of the best monthlies of this admirable magazine we have ever seen, with a variety in its contents to please every taste."—Worcester Guardian.

"The Dublin University Magazine! is certainly the very best of the monthlies, we never arrive at the fag-end without a regret."—Boston Times.

"The Dublin University Magazine! comes as much recommended by its brevity and terseness, national characteristics, in freshness, and a glorious chapter of Charles O'Malley."—John Bull.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY. PRICE 2s. 6d.

The Number for January, 1842, will commence a new Volume.

Each Number contains a portrait of some distinguished Irishman—the following have already appeared:

Rev. C. S. Stanford...Rev. C. S. Stanford...
Edward Litten...Edward Litten...
Adam Bottomley...Adam Bottomley...
Edward Walford...Edward Walford...
Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...Lord Chief Justice Fiennes...
William H. Maxwell...William H. Maxwell...
Hunter...Hunter...
Henry R. Addison...Henry R. Addison...
Lion-Coll. Chalmers...Lion-Coll. Chalmers...

"Of the monthlies our decided favourite—picking to none in elegance, variety, and vigor, in slightness, gravity, and humor, published with its contributions one of the very first classes in their respective lines."—Savannah Journal.

"The literary portion of the Magazine we turn with more than ordinary pleasure."—Northern Whig.

"One of the best monthlies of this admirable magazine we have ever seen, with a variety in its contents to please every taste."—Worcester Guardian.

"The Dublin University Magazine! is certainly the very best of the monthlies, we never arrive at the fag-end without a regret."—Boston Times.

"The Dublin University Magazine! comes as much recommended by its brevity and terseness, national characteristics, in freshness, and a glorious chapter of Charles O'Malley."—John Bull.